FOUR M's OF GERMAN PRODUCTION

Formula of Musical Movie Motivation Is Exemplified by Ufa's "Congress Dances" at the Rivoli

BY JOSEPH O'SULLIVAN

There is an authentic musical legend to the effect that genuine German gemuethlichkeit is a component of the Four Bs—Bach, Beethoven, Brahms and Beer. Given these ingredients, any Teutonic gathering of music-lovers is assured Valhalla.

Just how important is the last named of this quartet is obvious to those familiar with the customs and musical life of Berlin, Vienna, Leipzig and other European oases where melody and Muenchener flow ad lib. The best traditions of Teutonic musical art trace back to this formula of the Four Bs. And now it seems that the German motion picture producers are building up a new alliteration of Ms for the sound screen, as Musical Movie Motivation Methods are rapidly assuming a definite, though plastic form in the land of Hindenburg and Hitler.

This latest motion picture-music formula is brilliantly exemplified by "Congress Dances," perhaps the most notable product of its kind yet imported into this country. It was made by UFA and is distributed in the United States by United Artists. It had its premiere Wednesday night at the Rivoli in New York.

A Happy Setting

The period and the locale of the story (it is the Vienna of 1814) make a happy setting for a satirical farce-comedy of royal romance and naive nonsense, subtly interwoven with authentic Viennese melody that functions as an integral component of the production. There is just a touch of Gilbertian treatment in the 'book,' the dialogue being written in a manner that suggests a cross between farce-comedy and comic opera. This enables the action to skim blithely along on the romantic wings of rhythmic melody or lapse intermittently into the more prosaic medium of straight dialogue, without giving the impression of a hybrid creation. The lightness, the frothyness of the material makes it peculiarly adaptable to such treatment; but it is the power of music to give impetus, color and significance to what might otherwise appear innocuous, that lifts this production into distinction. In putting "Congress Dances" together those responsible reveal an intelligent insight into the flexible nature of the audible screen, and the result can be set down as a distinct advancement in the methods of welding pictures, dialogue and music into a coherent mold and as a really splendid place of entertainment.

"JUST ONCE FOR ALL TIME"

Refrain
p not fast
Just once for all time, does good luck greet you And lead you on to par a - dise? Just once for all time, does for - tune

This sparkling number is first used in a joyous sequence where Christel, the charming shopgirl, rides triumphantly from her little shop to the luxurious villa placed at her disposal by Prince Metternich. It demonstrates strikingly the power of rhythmic tonal reinforcement in translating visual motion into motivating action. Subsequently it serves as a romance theme for the Czar and Christel. The music of "Just Once For All Time" is by Werner R. Heymann, the words are by Rowland Leigh. It is published by Harms, Inc., New York, by arrangement with Campbell, Connelly & Co., Ltd.

In order to appraise justly the musical treatment and the degree to which it enhances and motivates the action and characterization, an outline of the story is necessary.

The Story

Prince Metternich, Austrian chancellor, has called a Congress of European Powers to Vienna to settle the question of what to do with Napoleon, who is fishing at Elba. Every day brings a fresh Emperor, Czar or King to the Austrian capital, and each royal visitor receives an annoying surprise in the guise of a bouquet caroming off the royal cranium as he is driven along the Broadway of Vienna. The tosser of the flowers is Christel Weinsinger, beautiful and enterprising glove salesgirl who attaches an advertisement for her shop to each bouquet. Metternich is peeved at the fraulein's actions and when Czar Alexander I, handsome young Lothario of all the Russias, is greeted with the usual bouquet bouncing off his proboscis, Christel is imprisoned and sentenced to receive twenty lashes on her bare back. But the gallant Czar intercedes and personally conducts the brash young lady to a convenient wine garden—and the romance begins.

Metternich proceeds to turn the incident to his political advantage. He has Christel installed in a luxurious villa and gives the Czar the address and a key. The wily chancellor also engages a Viennese countess of much pulchritude and technic to cheer up the Czar when he is not with Christel. This is all part of Metternich's plan to keep the Czar away from the Congress when his presence there is not desirable. But the Czar has a card or two up his royal sleeve. One of these is his double, who takes his master's place when the going gets rough. And so it happens that when Metternich thinks the Czar is with one or the other of the sirens, Alexander bobs up serenely at the Congress much to the annoyance of the Austrian chancellor.

As a last resort, Metternich arranges to have the Czar sell kisses at a State Ball for charity while the Congress meets and disposes of Napoleon. This plan succeeds, as the Czar, spying Christel at the Ball while his double is substituting for him in peddling kisses, takes her to the wine garden down the street, leaving Metternich and his Congress to do as they please. Just as the edict exiling Napoleon for life is pronounced, a messenger arrives with the information that the irrepressible Corsican has escaped from Elba and landed in France.

The dogs of war are unleashed again. The Czar rushes back to Russia to ensconce himself in Czarko Selo, swearing to Christel before he goes that though his body may be in St. Petersburg, his spirit remains in Vienna—and his heart is Christel's.

Music Demanded

With such a naive narrative on which to build a feature length production, it is apparent that dialogue and pictorial alone would not suffice to make this anything but just another picture of the romance of royalty specie. It demanded music, and

"LIVE, LAUGH AND LOVE"

Refrain
p-f
Take what this life of ours can give,
Live, love and laugh, Laugh, love and live.

A characteristic Viennese waltz, used in the wine garden scene where Christel and the Czar have their rendezvous. At the conclusion it is the Siren Song that lures the Crowned Heads of Europe from the Congress to the charms of the dance and the Viennese Venuses. Even the chairs which they have vacated come under the spell of this waltz and sway in synchrony to its rhythm. The music, by Werner R. Heymann, is based on a theme of Josef Strauss. Rowland Leigh wrote the words. Harms, Inc., New York is the publisher, by arrangement with Campbell, Connelly & Co., Ltd.

COORDINATING MUSIC WITH ACTION

music makes it what it is—a captivating, effervescent screen production.

An effective and exhilarating instance of musical motivation is presented when the emissary from Prince Metternich enters the glove shop where Christel is employed and announces that the carriage awaits to take her to her villa. The announcement interrupts a boisterous scene which had ensued when Christel's co-workers laughed derisively at her account of her experience the evening before with her royal lover. Immediately the spirit of the scene is transformed to one of joyous, vivacious motion, as the music picks up the action with the sparkling tempo of a fox trot, "Just Once For All Time" ("Das gibt's nur einmal").

"To the villa?" queries Christel, perplexed.

"To your villa," replies the emissary. "It is Prince Metternich's order."

"To my villa!" cries Christel, as she enters the carriage and starts a triumphal ride to her villa—to romance—to her lover! "Just once for all time, does good luck greet you and lead you on to Paradise," swells the refrain, and a chorus of voices join with Christel's as she sings.

Happy Coordination

Through the crowded streets of old Vienna, hailed joyously by the populace who augment the chorus. Past cafes and trysts of lights o'love; out into the country, with glimpses of lovers in sylvan glades. All the world is glad and moves and sings in rhythmic rhyme to the music, and Christel's heart sings in unison. The horses step at a brisk pace, the carriage sways in time to the lifting song:

"Just once for all time, does good luck greet you
And lead you on to Paradise;
Just once for all time, does fortune treat you
To happiness beyond all price."

This happy coordination of music and words with pictured action translates to the audience the emotional content, while sublimating visual motion into motivating action. Words and pictures alone would not be adequate. With tonal reinforcement this sequence is given a vitality and significance that sustains throughout the entire episode.

A Subtle Phase

There is, of course, the typical Vienna cafe scene where the populace imbibes liquid joy and loosens up on Viennese lieder. The wine garden where Alexander and Christel keep their rendezvous fits into the musical development of the story with the introduction of a characteristic chanson entitled "Das muss ein Stueck von Himmel sein!", which has been given the English title of "Live, Laugh and Love," and the text reflects that joie d'esprit rampant in old Vienna: "Take what this life can give, live, love and laugh; drink to the dregs, nor leave the half." The light-hearted Viennese are exposed taking this admonition literally as they join the cafe singer viva voce in the refrain. Having thus been identified with the romance of the glovegirl and the Czar, the song appears in a thematic manner at moments throughout the picture.

FREE ADMISSION AT RUSSIAN HOUSES

Motion picture theatre admissions in Russia are free or very nominal, according to Frederick J. Haskin, Washington correspondent of the Columbus, Ohio, "Dispatch," who compares the American and the Russian film situation in an article for his paper.

At the beginning of 1932, he says, there were in the Soviet Union 32,000 film houses. For the most part the theatres are small and some decidedly makeshift. There are none of the cinema palaces of which the United States boasts. Haskin guesses that the numbers attending the Russian film theatres are far greater than in this country, chiefly because of the very small admission fee, or none at all. The free admission is accounted for by the fact that the film industry in Russia is a government subsidy, to the extent of some $65,000,000 a year.

At this point is revealed an interesting and subtle phase of music motivation. We hear the song in the cafe and see the dancers there. The scene shifts to the street where all Vienna seems infected with the impulse to "Live, Laugh and Love" the hours away. We see closeups of the dancers' legs keeping time to the rhythm of the music. The legs dissolve into other legs—those of ballet dancers, while the music merges from the waltz to the ballet music from Prince Igor by Borodin—and the scene is now in the opera house with the Russian Ballet in full swing. The Czar's double is there, while Alexander himself is back in the wine garden. At the conclusion of the opera house scenes, back to the wine garden and the strains of "Live, Love and Laugh." The artistry with which these transitions are made is typical of the subtle fusion of action and music throughout the production.

Another theme—one that might be called the "Czar's Identification Motif"—is Schubert's Marche Militaire, which pops in with a sort of "We know you, Alexander" sense, as if the music were tipping off the Czar's real identity. This gives somewhat of a maestoso effect to Alexander's exit from the cafe with Christel, followed by the merry populace who gallantly escort the pair to a waiting carriage, humming and whistling the march as they go down the street, past the house of Christel where outside watches the young secretary of Metternich who is really in love with the girl. As the military motif dies out there follows just enough of the refrain of "Live, Love and Laugh" to give an ironic-pathetic touch.

The Dance Has Its Innings

It is at the State Ball at the conclusion that Vienna's most famous product, the dance, has its innings. Here the scene shifts alternately from the ballroom to the hall where the Congress is in session and into which the strains of the music seep while the fate of Napoleon hangs in the balance. The music of the two principal themes, "Just Once For All Time" and "Live, Laugh and Love," alternate here. The siren song of the Waltz proves too much for the Crowned Heads of Europe. So alluring is the music that the menace of the Terrible Corsican fades into nothingness. Let Metternich do what he will with Bonaparte—as for them on with the dance! "Live, Laugh and Love. Drink to the dregs, nor leave the half!"

And one by one the Great Minds of Europe slip quietly from the Congress Hall and yield themselves to the seductive charms of the Viennese Waltz and the Viennese Venuses. As Metternich, in solitary grandeur, hurls his anathema at the exiled Napoleon, a curious phenomenon takes place: the luxurious empty chairs just vacated by the Crowned Heads also come under the spell of the Waltz and sway rhythmically to and fro in synchrony with the music.

Congress dances while Napoleon is being put on the spot!

The Theme Changes

The Czar and Christel are tete-a-tete in the wine garden under the spell of "Live, Laugh and Love" and when a messenger comes to inform Alexander of Napoleon's escape from Elba. The romance theme of "Live, Laugh and Love" quickly changes to the Marche Militaire as the Czar tells Christel that sterner things call him back to St. Petersburg. Again the theme changes when the royal romancer marches out of Christel's life and she watches him wistfully to the plaintive strains and now melancholy words of "just one for all time, does good luck greet you and lead you on to Paradise."

Music and America

It is reported that "Congress Dances" has entertained huge audiences in Paris, London, Berlin, Vienna and other European cities, with corresponding box office returns of many millions of francs, thousands of pounds and hundreds of thousands of marks. This is not hard to believe. It might be safe to predict that the picture will garner excellent returns in American dollars; for there are many astute observers of the audible screen who are convinced that our public will be responsive to musical photoplays so admirably done as is this UFA production distributed by United Artists.

Schnitzer to Coast

Joseph I. Schnitzer left New York last Friday for Hollywood, where he will produce a series of four features for Radio release. His assistant, Harry Takiff, will follow him shortly.

Columbia Re-Signs Cummings

Irving Cummings has been re-signed by Columbia to direct six pictures. The first will be "The Murder of the Night Club Lady."

BRITISH PUBLIC STILL NOT SERIOUS ON HOME PRODUCT, POLL SHOWS

Mooring Hints Laxness of Industry in Doing Nothing to Popularize Stars and Stories of English Productions

Four American Films Lead in Sidney Bernstein's Questionnaire; Lubitsch Director Preference; Shearer, Colman Stars

By WM. H. MOORING, London

Sidney Bernstein, England's most progressive young theatre man, believes in research applied to the cinema industry.

Annually he consults the public—a large number of public personalities as well as all his theatre patrons—on the question of film preferences, undertaking the whole of the cost of circulating a questionnaire, tabulating the results, and issuing these for the benefit of the industry at large.

This year three officers have been engaged for a period of four months in this work of classifying public opinions expressed in the large response to the Bernstein questionnaire, and the reactions are both interesting and disappointing to all those engaged in the British film industry. They may convey lessons: and only so far as they do will they compensate the British executives for the revelations they convey, that the British public has not yet taken the home film producers seriously into reckoning. It may be that the British film industry is lax in that when it does turn out better British films, it does nothing to popularize its stars and stories with the picture public.

Many Want Occasional Silent

Answers to the query, "Would you like silent films to return?" show that 55 per cent of those responding would not, and 48 per cent would like to see silents occasionally as a change from talkies. Among suggested silent "revivals" very few indeed were British films.

The most popular pictures of the year placed four American films at the head with only two British features—"Tons of Money" and "Plunder," anywhere in the running. The first four were "Hell's Angels," "Min and Bill," "Trader Horn" and "The Devil to Pay."

A surprising revelation emerging from this year's questionnaire is the fact that the film public follows the work of film directors, and can offer constructive opinion on its relative merits. In answer to the question, "Who is your favorite film director?" 92 per cent of the persons filling in the questionnaire made reply, and of these 80 per cent coupled the director with his right films. The ballot revealed that the first four directors in order of merit were Lubitsch, Tom Walls (British), Lewis Milestone, and Alfred Hitchcock (British). Old favorites like D. W. Griffith, Cecil B. de Mille and Rex Ingram came ahead of many of the more modern Hollywood directors at present in the titles.

Talkers Increased Their Attendance

Eighty per cent of the people replying admit going to the cinema more often since talkers came and they give some frank answers as to stars whom they ceased to love after the talkers gave them a voice. Greta Garbo came second in this list of unfortunates.

A report issued recently by the British Home Office on criminal statistics in England and Wales in 1930 does not once, in the whole of its 200 pages, place any censure upon the cinema as an agent in the stimulation of crime. On the other hand, it does show quite definitely that in the British industrial areas now severely stricken with depression, crime increase among the adolescent and adult population is contributable to increasing poverty. This report provides material for disturbing reflection on the report of the many vigilant societies, cinema inquiry committees and other semi-official or self-appointed bodies who have recently intensified their activities against the film in this country.

The first ten feminine stars in order of merit were Norma Shearer, Constance Bennett, Marie Dressler, Ruth Chatterton, Janet Gaynor, Greta Garbo, Jeanette MacDonald, Joan Crawford, Ann Harding, and Marlene Dietrich.

The first ten male stars were Ronald Colman (first in each questionnaire since 1927), Clive Brook, George Arliss, Robert Montgomery, Maurice Chevalier, John Boles, Ralph Lynn (British), Tom Walls (British), William Powell and Wallace Beery. The absence of Clark Gable is surprising.

Stars who appear according to replies to be almost forgotten by the British public include Douglas Fairbanks, Mary Pickford, Betty Balfour, Harold Lloyd, Norma Talmadge, Laura la Plante, Al Jolson (poor father of the talkers), John Gilbert, Dolores del Rio, Clara Bow, Esther Ralston, Vilma Banky and Adolphe Menjou. Several of these were top of the list in the 1928 returns.

Among the revivals asked for were "Ben Hur," "The Four Horsemen," and "Seventh Heaven." "Ben" is already in process of revival in the British theatres—what of the others?

Dent Favors Block Ban

That American exhibitors and the trade as a whole would be well served by the institution by America of legislation similar to that operating in Great Britain is the opinion of Arthur Dent on his return from America. The principal trouble in the cinema trade in America at the present time, said Mr. Dent, is that the public confidence has been undermined by the overselling of a large number of mediocre pictures.

This does not mean that Hollywood is not producing pictures of such high average quality as hitherto; it means merely that exhibitors are compelled under the present system of merchandising in America, to buy up whole outputs from the distributors without having an opportunity of viewing them, contrasted with the principle in Great Britain where it is illegal under the Films Act 1927 to book a film until it has been trade shown. The executives of British International propose, in marketing their product in America, to put this principle into practice and they will adopt the slogan "Look before you book," arranging that the press and exhibitors themselves shall have the fullest facilities for viewing every one of their pictures before they are actually booked to any theatre.

The system operating in America is not only apt to sicken the public, but places no check upon the producers. If the producers were well aware that they had to book their films individually after showing them in finished form, they would concentrate more seriously on maintaining a high quality of programme output.

Mr. Dent expresses entire satisfaction with the present prospects of his company's products in America and insists that the American public shows no resistance to good British pictures. It is, he says, the trade alone which offers any kind of resistance today. He announces that his company will send over 20 pictures per year for distribution through Powers Pictures, Inc. These will be selected from about 25 features, the right of rejection being exercised by Powers. The contract arranged covers a period of five years with graduating guarantees. It is subject to revision annually.

British Censorship Meeting Asks Inquiry Into Industry

A comprehensive inquiry into the arrangements by which films are licensed in Great Britain, was demanded recently by 400 delegates to the National Conference of Film Censorship, held at Birmingham University, Birmingham. Also demanded was the reception by the Home Secretary of a deputation on the subject.

The present method, a censorship board set up by the industry itself, was pointed out as disastrous, since it had no power of enforcing its decrees. The plea made by one delegate for a strong national censorship was overridden by a stronger insistence on more general education in regard to films and the cultivation of a higher popular standard.

Siegel Named Branch Manager

Henry Siegel has been named Paramount branch manager in New York, succeeding Milton Kusell, recently named district manager in New York.

OVER 200 TECHNICIANS ATTEND SMPE SESSIONS IN WASHINGTON

New Scientific Data Revealed at First 1932 Convention; Possibility of Extending Frequency Range Described

Papers Give Important Treatment to 16-mm. Field; Society Bureau Suggested as Technical Service to Theatre

More than 200 of the motion picture industry's technicians gathered in Washington this week for the four days of semi-annual sessions of the Society of Motion Picture Engineers. The first 1932 convention of the society, and also the first under the presidency of Dr. A. N. Goldsmith, was conducted at the Wardman Park Hotel from Monday morning through Thursday, ending Thursday evening with a banquet.

Notable among the technical revelations made at the spring convention was the disclosure in a paper by G. L. Dimmick, that a decided improvement in the naturalness of sound has been prepared for with the practical extension of the frequency range. The low frequency range has been extended by the use of a loudspeaker unit which gives good response from 60 to 10,000 cycles. The high frequency range has been extended by the use of a ribbon type of microphone, and by the reduction of film attenuation. The use of a narrower recording slit and a large mirror galvanometer was set forth as having improved the high-frequency response from the film. The system described refers to developments in the laboratories of RCA Photophone. In engineering circles it has also been known for some time that Western Electric is now bringing to fruition work seeking a similar extension of the frequency range upward.

Discuss Educational Topics

Papers were read at both morning and afternoon sessions on all four days. Four of the papers were devoted to visual education and 16-mm. photography, projection and sound. These were by Chauncey L. Greene, H. Pfannenstiehl and R. A. Miller, H. C. Holden and R. G. Tasker and A. W. Carpenter.

W. G. Jones and D. T. Bell presented a paper describing a unique type of microphone of special adaptation to the broadcasting of speeches. This device, which is designed to be worn on the speaker's clothing, permits freedom of movement not now allowed by the fixed location of the microphone.

Not directly associated with motion picture technics, but a discussion that none the less made an impression with suggestions regarding the activities of the society in its relationship to the theatre, was a paper read by Charles E. Lewis, editor of the Managers' Round Table in MOTION PICTURE HERALD. Under the title, "How Can the S. M. P. E. Be of Greater Service to Theatre Managers," Lewis proposed the establishment of a service bureau in the society, to which theatre owners and managers could submit specific problems and receive advice concerning them.

"Not enough emphasis," declared Lewis, "has been placed upon the equipment and furnishings of the theatre, so far as the average exhibitor or manager is concerned. He has been, in many cases, 'over-sold' on show-merchandising and 'under-sold' on keeping his theatre in perfect condition where the physical equipment of that theatre is concerned."

Cites Projection Flaws

Anticipating the question as to how the society could help in educating the theatre owner and manager regarding the physical functions of the theatre, Lewis introduced the idea of a service bureau so conducted that the theatre operator would have in it a source of information divorced from all considerations other than of helpfulness.

"Through ignorance alone and no other cause," he said, "many fine theatres are today operating with booth equipment that is crying aloud for attention. They depend almost entirely on the projectionists, many of whom are conscientious and capable, but unfortunately there are others who are nothing better than ordinary 'operators.'"

Lewis also cited sound, seating, projection accessories and other divisions of the modern theatre's physical equipment in examples indicating matters in which an S. M. P. E. service bureau could be of direct and to managers.

In discussing theatre noise problems, S. K. Wolf of Electrical Research Products, reading a paper by himself and J. E. Tweeddale, said that an analysis of the various theatre noise sources, the factors influencing noise transmission, and the general structural limitations, indicates that no general solution of specific noise problems may be readily expressed except that the reduction of noise be made directly at its source.

The convention opened at about 11 o'clock Monday morning with an address of welcome by John Gibbs, who represented Sol. Bloom, chairman of the Washington Bi-Centennial Celebration Committee. Response was made by Dr. Goldsmith, as president of the S. M. P. E.

The report of the Projection Practice Committee was made by F. H. Richardson, in the absence of Harry Ruben, the chairman. The report of the Standards Committee dealt largely with the standardization of 16-mm. dimensions, and was referred back to the committee for further consideration. It required 55 pages of manuscript text for the Progress Committee to report technical progress since the fall convention.

Among speakers at the convention were M. A. Lightman, president of the MPTOA, and N. Glasser, assistant zone manager of Warner Brothers, in Washington, and at a special gathering, C. J. North, chief of the motion picture division of the Department of Commerce.

Many Firms Represented

Arrangements for the Washington convention were in the hands of a committee headed by N. A. Golden, assistant chief of the motion picture division of the U. S. Department of Commerce. The paper committee was headed by O. M. Glunt.

KANSAS CITY AND CHICAGO AGAIN PROTEST POLICY OF DOUBLE BILLS

Distributors Polled by Kansas City Exhibitors Indicate Majority Opposed to Practice; Chicago Clubwomen Ask Patrons

Several Sales Executives Call Twin Featuring a Local Problem; "Lowest Form of Showmanship," Kent Is Quoted

Double featuring in territories where the practice is considered an "evil" may be curbed and possibly entirely eliminated next season through action of distributors, many of which have gone on record in answer to independent exhibitors of Kansas City, and at other times, as opposing the dual system of screening.

Continuing its vigorous and prolonged efforts to alleviate what is described as a serious situation in the Kansas City territory, President Jay Means and members of the Independent Theatre Owners of Greater Kansas City polled sales executives of the major companies to ascertain their sentiments in the matter and the results indicate that the double bill will be moderated if many of the general sales managers have their say.

Protest Skouras Policy

The Skouras interests have been on the receiving end of protests for the double feature policy which they installed in the Fox Midwesco theatres immediately after taking over operation from Fox some weeks ago. Means is said to have made an appeal to Skouras executives and to Fox Midwest for relief, but to no avail, and his organization next sought the opinions and sentiments of leading distributors in the hope that they might aid.

The Skouras houses are Fox properties, Skouras brothers merely having an agreement to operate all of the corporation's theatres, and from Sidney R. Kent, president of Fox, the independents heard the most vehement denunciation of double features. Kent is quoted as referring to doubles as "the lowest form of showmanship."

"I am entirely sympathetic with your viewpoint," Kent wrote Means. "My sympathy has been against double features always. However, before I came into Fox, they had already made a contract with Mr. Skouras, which limits my ability in connection with making certain moves, but I shall use my moral arguments with them to get this practice stopped if at all possible." Kent also said he would communicate with the independents' organization "in the near fture."

Local Problem, Says Lichtman

The independent exhibitors, however, are said not to be so well pleased with the reply received from Al Lichtman, vice-president and general manager for distribution of United Artists.

"As a matter of policy," Lichtman wrote, "we are opposed to double programs, guest nights, merchants nights, etc., in the operation of a motion picture theatre. However, in the final analysis every exhibitor has to figure out for himself what is best for his own welfare and pocketbook, and that is how double bills come about.

WHAT PRICE NAME?

It seems that Miss Amy McVicker, granddaughter of The McVicker who figured largely in early Chicago history (whose daughter, Mary, became the wife of Edwin Booth, the famous actor) was visiting here not long ago. She went to the old McVicker's theatre (now under the guiding star of Balaban and Katz), purchased two tickets and then asked if she might see the offices, for sentimental reasons, adding casually that her grandfather had built the theatre.

The house official was interested. "That so?" he asked. "Which one was your grandfather, Mr. Balaban or Mr. Katz?"—The Chicagoan.

"During a depression in business, exhibitors as well as other retail merchants attempt almost everything they can think of to stimulate business and outdo competitors. "The question of abolishing double bills in Kansas City is entirely a local problem and one for each individual to decide for himself."

To this the independents reply that the practice is a problem that vitally affects the entire industry and if it were up to them as individuals they would have discontinued it long ago. Other sales executives heard from expressed opposition to twin bills.

What Others Say

Felix F. Feist, M-G-M general sales manager, said. "You can depend upon our wholehearted cooperation to kill off this double feature menace."

Charles Rosenzweig, Columbia general sales manager opined. "The prevention of double billing has considerable merit and at no time do we encourage any of it. However, as you know, it is impossible for us to control the policies of theatres but we will be more than happy to cooperate with you if it is at all within our power."

Gradwell L. Sears, general sales manager of Warner Brothers, wrote: "I have referred the matter to William Warner, our Kansas City manager, for his consideration. I certainly agree with you that the double feature practice is a menace to our business and should be discouraged wherever possible."

E. W. Hammons, president of Educational, said: "When the forward-looking theatre owners generally realize the folly of the double feature policy, as you do, the problem will be well on the road to a solution. I want you to know that nobody in the entire Educational organization will overlook any opportunity to do anything possible to discourage this evil habit in Kansas City or anywhere else."

In the meantime, in Chicago, occasionally described as the "hotbed" of double featuring, efforts are being made by the important Illinois Federation of Women's Clubs to exert a check on double bills at theatres in the Chicago territory. Votes are being conducted in various theatres there by the federation to determine whether patrons desire double programs or diversified entertainment including short subjects.

Chicago Women Protest Policy

The Illinois organization invited M. Martin, assistant to Max Stahl, Educational's branch manager at Chicago, to attend a special meeting to address their members on double features. Martin suggested various ways in which the women's clubs and the Parent-Teachers' associations can be of direct benefit in helping to eliminate the practice. As a result of the meeting, Martin obtained a letter from Mrs. E. L. McClure, chairman of the motion picture committee, which can be used in connection with the fight against the situation. The Illinois federation represents 70,000 families in the Chicago territory. Already the association is said to have accomplished considerable by contacting exhibitors and demanding at least one night a week or Saturday afternoons for special family entertainment which they have guaranteed to support, and many theatres in the territory have been polling patrons to settle the question. Max Stahl reports that in every instance patrons are decidedly against the practice of double bills.

Successful in Dallas

Theatregoers in Dallas—a typical Southwestern industrial city of the front rank—like the double feature idea, if patronage at houses presenting two features is any barometer. Business is reported fairly good at all the theatres presenting two features for the price of one.

According to J. Miller, Capitol theatre, first-run house, double bills have been highly successful, so far. Admission has been changed at this house since double bills started. The Avenue, Queen and Oak Cliff, suburban houses, likewise report that double bills are proving popular at low prices. It now appears the double bill policy will become a permanent thing at these three suburban houses and the downtown Capitol.

Several houses give a double bill and prizes at no advance in admission. The reason, according to various managers, is to increase and stimulate business and meet competition set up by others giving the double fare. Theatres in Fort Worth also report business has increased under the double-feature policy. Double bills at the Ritz, Houston, are proving fairy successful.

TRI-CORNERED OBSTACLE MAKES OPERATIONS OVERSEAS DIFFICULT

Joe Friedmann of Columbia Cites Economic Conditions Abroad, Legislative Restrictions and Language Barrier

Acuteness of economic conditions, coupled with legislative restrictions and problems of dialogue arising out of language barriers, are making it increasingly difficult for American distributors to do business in Europe, according to Joe Friedman of London, foreign representative for Columbia, who arrived in New York last week.

Friedmann lists national restrictions against the removal of moneys, which have been imposed by numbers of European nations, as one of the first problems of the American distributor. Unfavorable exchange rates, dialogue problems and quota laws are also cited by him as contributing to "the most serious situation which has existed abroad in years."

Hurts European Even More

"France, Switzerland, Belgium, Holland and the Scandinavian countries are now the only European nations which have no restrictions against the removal of money by foreign enterprises," Friedman pointed out.

The stringency of the restrictions enforced by the other nations, he said, is paralyzing business in Europe; it affects the European producer-distributor even more than it does the American, because the latter, ordinarily, is better financed and less dependent on foreign revenues. The American distributor is better able to leave his money earned abroad on deposit in banks in the country of its origin, hoping for modification of economic restrictions and pending a possible improvement in adverse exchange rates.

"Quota laws," Friedman continued, "also continue to be a problem in some European countries, although their seriousness is minimized to some extent by natural barriers of language which restrict markets for American pictures to such a definite degree that it becomes inadvisable for the American distributor to bring out more than a certain small number of pictures in any foreign country. Frequently, this number is no more than is permitted in the quota laws of the country.

New Germany Quota Even Worse

"Germany's contingent laws expire July 1 and indications are that the new ones will be even more severe."

Friedman said that American pictures are continuing to lose much of the prestige they held in the days of silent pictures in all non-English speaking European countries, due to dialogue problems arising out of language obstacles.

"Dialogue problems present American distributors with the most serious situation abroad they have faced in years," said Friedman. "Today, American dialogue pictures predominate in only English-speaking sections abroad. In others, audiences show a natural and distinct preference for productions having their own or a more readily understandable language. This situation is lightened only by occasional pictures of the action type, which have a minimum of dialogue and are more easily understood by foreign audiences."

"Adventure pictures," he added, "are much in demand abroad. 'Africa Speaks,' 'Trader Horn' and 'Dirigible,' and pictures of that type, found ready audiences abroad."

Need American Standards

Friedman said foreign distributors frequently complain that their productions deserve better consideration in America than has been accorded them.

"In answer to that," he said, "I always tell them that it is not the distributor or the circuit which, in the final analysis, decides on a picture's playing time. It is always the public.

"I remind them that foreign-made pictures would stand a better chance in America—and English-made pictures, in particular—if they were made according to American standards. As it is, they have not only the handicap of unknown players and unaccustomed languages and accents, but, in addition, are made on a cost basis which places the bulk of them on a competing basis with the poorer-than-average American program picture."

ERPI's Wide Range Sound in First Test At Fay's Theatre

Executives of important film companies and of Bell Laboratories, Western Electric and Electrical Research Products, will travel to Providence on Thursday to attend the first public demonstration on the same evening of Western's new "electric wide range reproducing system," details of which appeared exclusively in MOTION PICTURE HERALD on April 2.

The system allows for finer definition of softer tones and reaches greater volume, and was installed at the Majestic theatre at Providence, an Edward Fay property, for testing purposes with a staff of ERPI engineers working on the installation for the past two weeks.

Government Anti-Trust Suit Against Warner Set For Fall

Reach Agreement On Major Points In Cleveland Suit

Moves to effect an out of court settlement of the Cleveland exhibitors' monopoly suit against large distributors, circuits, the Hays organization and the Cleveland Film Board of Trade, were transplanted from New York to Cleveland with an agreement on several major points reported to have been arrived at this week.

Negotiations for a settlement of the case followed the withdrawal from the suit as plaintiffs of several Cleveland independent exhibitors, who contended that their names were used without authorization. Samuel Horwitz, attorney for the plaintiffs, who spent more than a week in New York recently gathering testimony by deposition, said that the withdrawals would have no effect on the suit and that it would be continued as long as "one plaintiff remains."

Reported terms of the Cleveland agreement are said to involve the reduction of protection for first-run downtown houses from 43 days to 35 days when the first runs also play a second run in the house belonging to the same companies. When a second run is not played, pictures are to be available to the subsequents in 28 days, according to the rumored plan. Subsequent-runs charging 25 cents admission will be given preference over those charging less, and a revision of availability for Loew's subsequent-runs is also to be fixed, it is said.

Double features will be banned, in all probability, from those theatres taking advantage of the proposed protection reduction; while double featuring houses will be set back 60 to 90 days.

Le Baron Goes from Radio to Paramount

William LeBaron will transfer to the Paramount studio on the Coast, June 1, his contract with Radio Pictures having been settled. The former vice-president of Radio will hold the post of associate producer under B. P. Schulberg, managing head of the Paramount plant.

LeBaron will have from eight to 10 pictures under his direct supervision in his new affiliation. His contract with Radio would have expired in December of this year.

Harold B. Franklin hopes to conquer Ol' Man Sol with a weighty dose of exploitation. The president of Radio-Keith-Orpheum's theatre subsidiaries and his new "cabinet" administrative setup will promote three separate nationwide campaigns during June, July, August and September in order to bolster box-offices of the circuit's properties during the so-called leaner weeks of summer.

National theatre circuits, and many territorial units, too, usually concentrate their ballyhoo activities immediately after the warm months, at the beginning of the "new show season." Rarely are campaigns similar to those planned by RKO effected between June and Labor Day.

In the meantime, Franklin has dispatched orders to all theatre managers of the circuit investing each with authority to purge their stage and screen of "filth and smut." It will not be tolerated in the future, according to Franklin's edict.

General Working Committee

Headed by Franklin and Martin Beck, vaudeville chief, a general "working committee" consisting of all home office executives and division managers are already at work on the formulation of plans for each of the three exploitation campaigns. The first will take the form of a search for new stage talent and will be known as "RKO's Opportunity to Young America," whereby a minimum of 3,360 local players or local acts will appear in 48 stage units, revues or vaudeville presentations, in as many key cities strategically spotted between both coasts. Single winners of each town will, in turn, appear in one show which will tour the entire circuit.

The campaigns will be the first definite ventures of the new management pointing toward renewed activities at the box-offices of RKO theatres and while it is admitted there is nothing particularly new about the basic premise of the first drive, except for its treatment as a nationwide proposition, executives of the circuit promise that this one will have plenty of new angles. "The fanfare of seeking entrants and the big noise of the contest," it is said, will take place during June, with the exploitation benefits of presenting the winners set for July. Both will be publicised nationally.

Every Possible Phase

The second campaign will take the form of a national "Greater Entertainment Season," intended for August when RKO's film division will get behind some heavy "plugging," with appropriate and elaborate exploitation displays, for company product.

Immediately following, in September, RKO will engage in a "Golden Harvest Month," which, according to executives, "will be the starting bell of 1932—of something happening every month."

The scope of "Greater Entertainment Season" will include every possible avenue of publicity, advertising and exploitation—tieups of various nature from newspapers to merchants; festivals, parades "and everything in the showmanship calendar," it is said.

Contracts will be awarded revue winners for a tour of the circuit, with the entire group of 48 individuals or local acts participating in one presentation—either a revue or vaudeville unit depending upon the character and type of the winning talent.

Theatres included in the plan include the Hippodrome, Albee, Coliseum, Fordham and Madison in New York; 105th Street at Cleveland; Palace, Chicago; Albee, Cincinnati; Palace at Columbus; Keith, Dayton; Emboyd, Fort Wayne; Regent, Grand Rapids; Rivoli, Toledo; Palace, South Bend; Orpheum at Springfield and Spokane, and the RKO theatres at Newark, Youngstown, Akron, Minneapolis, St. Paul, Seattle, both Portlands, San Francisco, Oakland, Los Angeles, Denver, Omaha, Kansas City, St. Louis, South Bend, Lowell, Boston, Yonkers, Albany, Troy, Schenectady.

Bobby Connelly, formerly of the Ziegfeld organization who joined RKO last week, will be general director for revues. He will have charge of words and music, costume, stage, scene and light plots. Terry Turner is in charge of a newspaper tieup through which entrants will be selected.

George Godfrey, Robert F. Sisk and Eddy Eckels will assist Franklin, Beck, Connelly, Herschel Stuart and Turner, with each division head appointing a committee of managers in the territories. The home office will supply theatres with copy for application blanks and complete campaign guides, and with advance publicity stories until the first entries are received locally. Theatres also will receive trailers from the home office, copy for lobby material and a full outline for tieups, all of which are to be arranged for by each manager. The tieup with a newspaper in town will be effected jointly by home office efforts and by the manager, and the name of the newspaper will be used in connection with each theatre revue.

"Filth Not Tolerated"

Earlier in the week it became known that all RKO managers, bookers and agents have received orders "to the effect that filth and

PARAMOUNT, UNIVERSAL SESSIONS END; FOX AND RKO READY TO OPEN

Fox Sales Convention Starts Monday in New York, RKO in Chicago; Warner Considers Four Regional Meetings

Annual sales conventions and discussions of new pictures and policies were concluded during the week by Paramount and Universal. Fox and RKO will open theirs on Monday, and the trend toward an early and auspicious start for the new 1932-33 season becomes more pronounced.

Universal ended a series of three regional meetings on Monday in New York. Previously, the company had met at San Francisco, on May 1 and 2, and at Chicago, May 5 and 6. Franchise holders and executives of Monogram Pictures also met at Chicago on May 2 and 3. Paramount held a four-day meeting, concluded on Sunday, at Los Angeles. RKO will hold its sessions at the Drake Hotel in Chicago on Monday to Wednesday, and Fox opens its conference on Monday at the Essex House in New York, meeting throughout the week. Others scheduled are an eastern and western meeting for Columbia and Educational-Tiffany's, tentatively set on July 15 in Los Angeles. May 22 and 31 are the respective dates for the Columbia sessions. MGM, Warners-First National and United Artists have not decided.

In place of a national sales get-together this year, Warners is considering four regional meetings to be held starting the first or second week in June. Regional spots for the sales talks are New York, Chicago, San Francisco and New Orleans.

Harold B. Franklin, Joseph Plunkett and Phil Reisman, of the RKO theatre division, together with Robert Sisk, director of press relations, will arrive at Chicago over the week-end from a studio visit in Hollywood. They will join home office and sales contingents in pre-convention discussions before the gavel is sounded on Monday morning at the Drake.

The use of the old and well known name of Pathe will be discarded in connection with future RKO product, which next season is expected to approximate 62 features, 52 two-reelers, the same number of one reels and Pathe News, issued twice weekly.

Fox All Set for Convention

The 28th annual sales convention of Fox Film Corporation will start promptly Monday morning in the auditorium of the company's headquarters at 444 West 56th Street. According to a home office statement issued this week, the corporation regards the approaching sessions "as the most important in the history of the company. With a personnel of executives long experienced in motion pictures, a sound financial program, 48 productions listed for the coming season and production concentrated in the largest and best equipped studio in the world, the Fox Film Corporation looks forward with confidence to a prosperous year," it was said.

Edward R. Tinker, chairman of the board of directors; Sidney R. Kent, president, recently returned from a survey of the Hollywood studio, and James R. Grainger, vice-president, will address the assemblage.

Present at the sales convention will be home office and field sales executives, sales department heads, branch managers and salesmen from the United States and Canada, as well as executives from the studio and foreign offices.

W. C. Michel, executive vice-president, will be there, and so will C. E. Richardson, vice-president and treasurer; Glenn Griswold, vice-president; Truman H. Talley, general manager of Movietonenews, and Clayton P. Sheehan, foreign distribution manager.

All Departments Represented

From the home office there will also be present J. Sichelman and E. C. Grainger, asistant sales managers; W. J. Kupper, assistant to J. R. Grainger; George A. Roberts, Movietonenews sales department and personnel; Nat B. Finkler, manager, contract department; Clarence A. Hill, generald booker; Roger Ferri, in charge of convention arrangements; Edward H. Collins; Edward Bonns, home office representative; Gabriel S. Yorke, director of advertising and publicity, and Lee Balsly, Carl Mos, Irving Maas, Maurice Ahern.

District managers who are scheduled to attend include John Nolan, Los Angeles; C. W. Eckhardt, district manager, Chicago; Max Roth, district manager, Kansas City, and J. P. O'Loghlin, Canadian district manager, Toronto, Ont.

The company has in work in Hollywood seven features, completion of which will conclude the current 1931-32 program, and will clear the release schedule up to August 1.

PARAMOUNT SAFE, SAYS ADOLPH ZUKOR

"Mr. Hertz was invited to come into our company. He does not want my job. He wants to help Paramount, to build Paramount for you, for me. Having a man of his far-reaching vision, his modesty, strength, tenacity and sane counsel is our life insurance policy.

"With his help, we have co-ordinated all of our departments. After twenty years, we have an institution with all departments working together with one thought, one ideal, one ambition.

"There is no selfishness in our company. There is nothing that is not open and above-board.

"The world gave us the depression. God gave us John Hertz, Sam Katz and Emanuel Cohen. Paramount is safe."

Universal Announces Two Roadshows, 26 "Special" Features and 88 Short Subjects, in Addition to Newsreel

First announcement of the new season's lineup was made to sales managers and division executives at the third and final Universal convention at the Park Central in New York on Monday. L. J. Schlaifer, in charge of sales, opened the meeting and outlined a program consisting of two road-show attractions, 26 "special" features and 12 westerns besides 88 one- and two-reel subjects and the twice-weekly Universal newsreel.

"The Road Back," Erich Maria Remarque's sequel to "All Quiet on the Western Front," will be the first road-show. R. C. Sherriff, author of "Journey's End," is at Universal City now making an adaptation.

The other road-show production is "S O S—Iceberg," by Dr. Arnold Fanck, which will require a six months' location trip to Greenland.

First of the 26 "specials" will be "The Old Dark House," directed by Jame Whale from the novel by J. B. Priestley. This has a cast headed by Boris Karloff, Melvyn Douglas, Lillian Bond, Raymond Massey, Eva Moore, Ernest Thesiger, Brember Wills and Gloria Stuart.

Two Elmor Rice plays are included. They are "Counsellor at Law" and "The Left Bank." Another Broadway play of a year ago, "Once in a Lifetime," by George Kauffman and Moss Hart, is to be made for this year's program. It was purchased some time ago.

Lew Ayres will appear in four, three of which are already selected. One won a Pulitzer prize, "Laughing Boy," by Oliver LaFarge; another is "Flight Commander," to be made from an unproduced play titled "The Empty Chair," by James Norman Hall and Charles Nordhoff, and the third is tentatively called "Men Without Fear."

Several well-known novels are included. Jim Tully's "Laughter in Hell" will be one. H. G. Wells' "The Invisible Man" will be used for Boris Karloff. "The Prison Doctor," by Dr. Louis Berg, is another. James Gould Cozzens' Scribner Magazine prize, "S. S. San Pedro," is now being enlarged to novel size, and will be published by Scribner's in the fall. Robert Louis Stevenson's "Suicide Club" is on the list. Edna Ferber and Nina Wilcox Putnam are also represented, the former by a Cosmopolitan Magazine story, "Glamour," and the latter by an adaptation of the century-old legend of the imposter, "Cagliostro." Boris Karloff will be starred in this.

George Sidney and Charlie Murray will again be represented by a Cohen and Kelly story, the locale of which has not been chosen. There will be a football story on the order of "Spirit of Notre Dame" ready by October 1st. Slim Summerville and Zasu Pitts are to be starred in two, one titled "The Substitute Bride" and the other "Beauty and the Brute."

There are also two airplane stories, one tentatively called "Air Mail" and the other "Zeppelin" Paul Lukas is to be starred in both. The Far East is represented by three productions, one, "Pagan River," by Wong Wellesley, for which a location trip is being planned to Malay and the Straits Settlements; another, "Black Pearls, for which an expedition will go to Taihiti, and the third, "Shanghai Interlude," written by Wong Wellesley.

Other productions are "Broken Dreams of Hollywood," Tala Birell featured, and "Youth Aflame," starring Sidney Fox.

Of the twelve Westerns, Tom Mix is to make six. The company will put out five serials: "Heroes of the West," by Peter B. Kyne; "Lost Special," by A. Conan Doyle; "Jungle Madness," by Talbot Mundy; "Clancy of the Mounted," by Robert W. Service, and "Phantom of the Air," by Ella O'Neill.

In addition to the newsreel, Universal's short product consists of 22 two-reelers, starring Slim Summerville, Louise Fazenda, James Gleason and Skeets Gallagher; 12, "Down Memory Lane," with Louis Sobol, and 13 radio featurettes with Nick Kenney starring such personalities and acts as The Street Singer, Sisters of the Skillet, The Rise of the Goldbergs, Texas Guinan, Kate Smith, Boswell Sisters, Major Stoopnagle and Bud, Morton Downey, Art Jarrett; 13 "Strange as It Seems"; 13 Oswald the Lucky Rabbit, and 13 "Pooch the Pup," a new cartoon character which will be introduced next year.

Early on Sunday morning L. J. Schlaifer, general sales manager, arrived from Chicago, accompanied by E. T. Gomersall and Ben Grimm. Schlaifer conducted the convention, as he had the previous ones in Chicago and in San Francisco. The convention was called to order by Ted Schlanger, sales manager of the eastern division. Others who spoke were Carl Laemmle, R. H. Cochrane, Charles Paine, treasurer; Willard McKay, general counsel, and Sam B. Jacobson, editor of Universal Newspaper Newsreel.

In addition to the heads of departments of Universal who attended and the sales executives, S. Wittmann, Harry Milstein and Douglass Leishman, others were Clair Hague, Toronto, and William Richardson, Atlanta, district managers, and Sol Resnick, special representative.

At the closing ceremony of the New York convention, Schlaifer presented medals and awards to 15 salesmen as the "Gold Star" salesmen of their exchanges. To Ben Price of the "Big U," he presented the Carl Laemmle special prize of $500 earned in the last contest as the best salesman of the eastern division.

At the convention in Chicago, Ben Eisenberg, of the Chicago exchange, was awarded the $500 prize.

Variously during the three Universal sessions held at San Francisco, Chicago and New York, sales representatives and their field heads were told by Sales-Chief Schlaifer that the company had determined to increase its production budget next season to $10,000,000, and that plans are in work for the remodeling of numerous of the company's key city exchanges. On the Coast, he told the Westerners "you've got to deliver the bacon, boys—hell, fire and water notwithstanding!" At Chicago, Schlaifer further urged "greater effort from everybody."

SAM KATZ TOLD CONVENTION:

"This is a day of economy. I am not thinking economy in the terms of thousands of dollars. I am thinking of pennies, of nickels and of dimes.

"The closest thing to treason in this or any other organization is curbstone gossip and criticism. To me it is lower than stealing money from the till. It will undermine and wreck any company or thing it touches. Bring your ideas and your criticism into the open and right to the top where you and your ideas and your criticism will be welcome."

Laemmle sounded an optimistic note throughout the gatherings. Universal faces the new season with the utmost confidence, he stated in a message read to the gathering in New York by Frank Mastroly. Laemmle at the time was indisposed with slight illness.

"We have never seen a time when good pictures were more needed than they are at the present moment," said Universal's president. "By good pictures I do not mean just pictures that are good. I mean pictures that have the elements of box-office drawing power which will make money for exhibitors. Our responsibility is to them. Without this kind of pictures, they are lost; their investment is unprofitable, their theatres will lose money," the message declared.

On Monday, Universal will reopen its Sioux Falls exchange as a full-fledged booking office. For the last few months it has been solely a distributing point. The exchange will be in charge of its former manager, Jack Langan. The former booker, Ernest Koeniguer, will also return.

Paramount Convention Concluded

The annual convention of the Paramount Publix Corporation, attended by practically all ranking officers, was brought to a close in Los Angeles on Sunday, following one of the most important series of sessions in recent years. MOTION PICTURE HERALD last week published titles and complete data concerning the company's feature and short subject program for 1932-33, which will consist of 63 features, 120 one- and two-reelers and Paramount News, issued twice weekly.

John D. Clark was the convention chairman, with George J. Schaefer addressing the delegates for the first time as sales manager. Other executives who spoke included Adolph Zukor, John Hertz, B. P. Schulberg, Emanuel Cohen, Sam Katz, Emil E. Shauer, J. H. Sidelman, John Hicks, among others.

At the opening session Schaefer announced six promotions, including: John W. Hicks, junior managing director of Australia and the Fast East, placed in charge of distribution for England, Australasia, the Far East and South Africa, with headquarters in New York. Hicks is succeeded in Australasia by William J. Clark. P. A. Bloch, branch manager of the Philadelphia exchange, elevated to district manager, with Oscar Morgan of Kansas City succeeding. J. T. Manfre, sales manager of the Kansas City office, appointed branch manager. J. M. Bettencourt takes over the helm of the San Francisco office, succeeding the late J. J. Patridge, under whom he was a salesman.

Prizes in the recent "Jubilee" drive were awarded to Henry Randell, Brooklyn manager; J. Stevens, Maine; Jim Kent, Chicago; J. Gallagahn, New Haven; Kenneth Robinson, Albany. John Clark presided at today's sessions.

Sales policy of Paramount for 1932-33 will be about the same as this year only it will be more flexible, states Schaefer. A combination of flat rental and percentage is planned based on the merit of the product and individual situations. The percentage pictures will be known as "20 percenters."

A new policy for foreign distribution was announced by Joseph H. Seidelman. There will be three divisions under the direction of a cabinet with headquarters in New York.

Division No. 1 includes all foreign English-speaking territory — England, Australasia, the Far East, Africa and India, under the direction of John Hicks. Division No. 2 will include all Spanish-speaking countries and will be headed by C. C. Margon, recalled from Mexico City two months ago. Division No. 3 will include continental Europe.

Seidelman told the convention the foreign language problem has disappeared. During 15 years, he said, the picture-going public of the world acquired a taste for American stars' technique which is continuing.

The convention served to introduce John Hertz, new chairman of the finance committee, to the sales and theatre department field staffs.

Four major improvements were made by Paramount, according to Emanuel Cohen, of the production department, as follows: Elimination of internal politics, speedier method of finding new material, encouragement of ideas and complete realization of and sympathetic understanding for problems of each department.

Cohen said that if a picture has no showmanship possibilities, nothing outstanding for the exhibitor to sell, it should not be made. The convention, he pointed out, has given a vote of confidence to B. P. Shulberg and the production department, which moral support, with the efficiency of the production department, "will make for more hits."

JOHN HERTZ HAS CONFIDENCE

"The fact that the industry is undergoing serious difficulties will only serve to strengthen it for the future. This industry is going through the same trials as all other great industries that grow rapidly. Yet out of stress comes strength. Your first years brought enormous profits. You did not foresee the end of this golden era, and you were overly prodigal. Now the day of reckoning is here, but it is gratifying to see the courage and energy with which your executives are facing the situation."

AUSTRALIA APPEAL CENSOR MADE FILM DICTATOR UNDER NEW LAWS

Given Authority to Throw Out Picture in Entirety If Distributor Protests Against Deletions Made by Board

By CLIFF HOLT, Sydney

While giving distributors in Australia an advantage in one direction, the revised Commonwealth censorship regulations give them a decided disadvantage in another. Under the new rules, the powers of the appeal censor have been considerably widened, to such an extent that now he is actually an authority overriding the chief censor. The position is clarified in the clause which states that, "on the hearing of the appeal, the appeal censor may with or without conditions allow the appeal or disallow the appeal, or may direct the censorship board to refuse to register the film." In other words, if a distributor appeals against cuts made by the censorship board, the appeal censor may go one further and throw the picture out in its entirety. The result is likely to be a large decrease in the number of appeals lodged, for few importers, having lost a couple of hundred feet of film at the hands of the chief censor, are likely to risk losing the lot at the hands of the appeal authority.

Right of Remake

The advantage referred to gives the renter the right of preview and reconstruction of his picture before submission to censorship, a privilege which existed years ago, but which for some reason or other was dropped. The conditions of preview demand, however, that before taking delivery from the customs department the distributor must enter into a bond of $2,500 to observe the regulations. For the benefit of occasional importers and distributors who are operating on a small scale and who might be unable to afford the $2,500, a special clause has been included, giving them the use of the censor's projection room on payment of the usual screening fee, and, subject to censorship supervision, permission to make any eliminations desired on the premises. Under those circumstances, the bond would not be required.

Howard Frank in Sydney

A newcomer to Australia, Howard H. Frank, manager of RKO-Radio's export division, will make his headquarters in Sydney, "for an indefinite period." Discussing film affairs with Motion Picture Herald's representative, Mr. Frank pointed out that the industry in the United States was at present undergoing a wholesale reorganization, "a reorganization made necessary in the first place by the worldwide slump, and, in the second, by the terrific losses sustained by the producer-exhibitor organizations in their theatre investments." The real estate crash, following so closely on a marked drop in theatre receipts throughout the country, was the blow which forced the banks and home office executives to search frantically for every possible avenue of economy, in Frank's opinion, "and as the stability of the business was at stake, economies were essential if the structure was to be safeguarded."

Even now rumors are occasionally heard in Sydney film circles that RKO will sooner or later adopt a policy of theatre acquisition and construction in Australia, more especially as purchases could today be made on a market at rock bottom. But if there is any foundation for those suggestions, Howard Frank knows nothing of it, though he admits that the possibility would always be there. "At least we would be buying at the right time, and there would be little chance of our being caught as they were caught at home," is his comment. "Surely property values will not drop lower."

Blames Lottery Ticket Sales

In its annual report, the N. S. W. Exhibitors' Association blames "tin-hares" and the money expended in state lottery tickets for absorbing two million Sydney theatre admissions each week. In case the "tin-hare" sounds to the American ear something like a freak of nature, it might be explained that it is the local name for greyhound coursing, on which betting at night has been legalized by the N. S. W. Government. The sport is highly popular, and on two nights a week about 20,000 prospective theatre patrons are enticed out to the track to gamble away money they probably can't afford to do without.

The report also declares that suburban theatre attendances have fallen off by 33 1/3 per cent as compared with those in "good times," but no figures are supplied to substantiate the assertion, and it can only be regarded as an estimation.

In a brief reference to the association's Fighting Fund, the executive mentions the fact that donations poured in during the early stages, only as a prelude to a decided slump. On that score, the executive has a rap at the circuits, saying: "In urging all those who have not yet contributed to the fund to do so, the executive would state that some of the bigger companies which received great benefits from it contributed very little."

RKO Bars "Smut" From Stage and Screen Showings

smut from RKO stages will not be tolerated in the future." "Without assuming the role of a prude or a reformer," Franklin's announcement pointed out, "the decline of the Broadway theatre is a lesson to vaudeville and even to the screen." In addressing the circuit's managers, Franklin said:

"You have full authority to delete any line of spoken dialogue on stage or screen, or any portion of stage business that you sincerely feel will be offensive to our patrons. We do not want to go to extremes, nor do we want to assume the role of reformers or prudes. Humor may be broad, but we must stamp out filth."

To vaudeville bookers, agents and artists he said:

"A real artist never depends on crude, uncouth humor. It's use is a reflection against the artist, as well as the theatre. It is a short cut to an illegitimate laugh. We are not running burlesque and have no desire to do so."

Cites Broadway Theatre Decline

In summing up Franklin said:

"Our greatest treasure is the reputation of RKO and the good will we earn in the presentation of clean entertainment. The vast majority of the American public are clean-minded and resent vulgarity. For more years than we can remember the crude jest, the pointed joke, has had its definite and fine place in the theatrical scheme of things. From the Greek gentlemen of 3,000 years ago, through Shakespeare, down to such modern writers as George Kaufman, Charles MacArthur, Ben Hecht, Sidney Howard and others, we find the excellent use of this material.

"But it isn't offensive because it springs from recognized sources. It derives from a kinship with our people. It is like emphasizing a German comedy character, bloated like those grotesque and flavorous gestures of the greatest of our comedians. How different from our modern school of comedy dealing in jokes about homosexuals, in gross impersonations of this type of comedy and a continued repetition of bedroom sketches.

"The decline of the Broadway theatre should be our lesson. Not only our lesson in vaudeville, but our lesson on the screen.

"The point I want to make is that uncouth vulgarity never made anything successful. We must change our viewpoint. Dirt in itself is inexcusable. And the RKO circuit is not going to tolerate it."

FILMS BUTT BULLS OUT OF ARENA OF AMUSEMENT FAVOR IN MEXICO

44 Theatres Sell 15,802,845 Tickets to 17,238 Shows in Year, Whereas 160,383 Pay To Witness 47 Bull Fights

By JAMES LOCKHART, Mexico City

Although exhibitors in Mexico's federal district, the Republic's zone of greatest population including the national capital and having slightly more than 1,000,000 residents, may only count upon about 80,000 for support, there is obviously no immediate danger of those operators going into the hands of receivers for lack of business. Comparatively few though the picture fans in the district may be, they are loyal to their diversion and are mighty good repeaters.

A considerable number of Mexican devotees think nothing of seeing a picture that takes their fancy thrice and even half a dozen times. Americans who get right down into Mexico are not long in having upset their long-cherished notion that bull fighting is the only thing that the natives care about in the matter of paid public entertainment. The fact is that motion pictures are by far the most popular form of diversion for which money must be paid in our sister republic. Bull fighting diverts only a very small element of Mexicans.

15,802,845 Tickets Sold in Year

These statements are based upon figures covering the various kinds of public functions charging admission that were staged in the district last year, compiled by the Mexican Bureau of National Statistics, a department that enjoys a reputation for accuracy and impartiality. These data show that in 1931 a total of 26,272 professional public entertainments were given in the District, for which there were 18,599,330 paid admittances. The greater part of this business went to the 44 picture theatres. They gave 17,238 shows in the year and sold 15,802,845 tickets. That volume of trade was so far ahead of the year's business done by the three bull fighting arenas —47 shows and 160,383 paid customers— that the popularity of the allegedly foremost Mexican national fun producer looked like the last horse in the 100th event after the big race.

The district picture houses' business in 1931 was approximately 15 times greater than that done by the 16 stage theatres. These gave 5,555 musical comedy, revue, vaudeville, dramatic, opera, concert and other performances in the twelve months and vended 1,679,954 billets. The Bureau points out that last year 38 film shows were given in the stage houses, which further increases the number of tickets in favor of the picture places.

"Killing the Theatre"

"The movies are killing the theatre in Mexico": that is the keynote of speeches made at the national convention staged by the Union of Mexican Actors and Dramatists now in session in Mexico City for the purpose of finding out why so many inhabitants of the land prefer the screen to the stage. Fans say they go to the cinemas because the screen affords greater entertainment, reflects life more truly, appeals more directly to the national love of philosophizing and gives more value for the peso than does the stage.

The Bureau's figures also disprove the idea that the public slaughter houses for bulls are the biggest buildings for the use of the Mexican public. According to these data, the District's cinemas have a combined seatage of 79,942 while the "blood and sand" arenas can accomodate but 24,806 persons. With the exception of a few curious Americans and other foreign visitors, who only attend once, bull fight ring proprietors have to depend upon repeat business by the limited few who relish seeing animals tormented and killed by chaps in funny hats and suits. Repeaters also constitute the bulk of trade by the cinemas. Bull fights are practically a Sunday business in Mexico. But so are motion picture. Theatre managers tell you that the greater portion of their trade is transacted on the Sabbath, which appears to be a competition that is reducing each week the holiday attendance at the arenas.

De Mille May Make Paramount Special

Paramount's deal with Cecil B. De Mille for one picture on its new schedule, to be titled "The Sign of the Cross," has not been completed yet, according to Hollywood report. De Mille, however, is expected to sign a contract for the picture, which will be one of two Paramount "specials," some time next week.

Tentative terms of the deal indicate that De Mille will handle the picture on a partnership basis, drawing a salary of $50,000 in the event production costs do not exceed $400,000. A split is provided on that cost basis. If the director exceeds the budget, it is understood, he forfeits the retaining figure, Paramount meets the added cost, and then the split becomes effective.

Commons Plans New Sunday Film Measure After a Defeat

Following defeat in the House of Commons committee of the measure providing for legalization of Sunday showing in England by local option, Parliament this week began the preparation of a new Sunday cinema measure, according to a London dispatch. Theatres which opened previously on an illegal basis in anticipation of a liberalizing measure being passed, in some instances are planning to continue Sunday showings. In other districts, it is regarded as likely that a plebiscite may be taken at the discretion of local authorities, and if the results are favorable a local parliamentary bill may be promoted to legalize Sunday showings in such districts.

Naval Chief Lauds Film Contribution

Recognition of the part played by motion pictures in familiarizing and popularizing the naval service with the public was made by Rear Admiral William A. Moffett, chief of the Navy Bureau of Aeronautics, at the regular weekly forum of the Motion Picture Club of New York, this week.

"In picturing the various branches of naval service for the public the industry is doing more to make the naval service popular and understandable to the nation than perhaps any other factor," said Admiral Moffett. "The navy can be competently written about but only pictures can really place it before the public. In these faithful picturizations, you of the motion picture industry are doing much more than you realize for your country," he said.

Al Lichtman, vice president of United Artists, in charge of distribution, was the second speaker of the day. An account of his proposed plan for changes in the distribution system of the industry, which he detailed in his address, is given elsewhere in this issue.

RKO Quarter Loss Is $2,166,713.67

Radio-Keith-Orpheum Corporation and subsidiaries reports net loss of $2,166,713.67 for the quarter ended March 31, 1932. This includes loss from operations of $519,162.44, from which is deducted profit from other sources of $52,294.52, resulting in a loss of $466,867.92.

The report indicates interest on gold notes and debentures as an expense of $219,567.86, which in addition to depreciation, put at $1,480,277.89, totals $1,699,845.75. The total quarterly loss of $2,166,713.67 results from the totaling of the operation loss, expense and depreciation items.

RKO to Re-Open Pathe Studio For Independent Production

B. B. Kahane, president of Radio Pictures, on the Coast to handle the re-opening of the Pathe Studio, the property of RKO Radio, said last week the lot will open to independent production shortly.

J. I. Schnitzer, Larry Darmour and J. G. Bachman have already engaged space at the plant. It is also expected that Amedee J. Van Beuren will handle future shorts production there. Phil Ryan is studio director for RKO, and is now arranging the technical staff. Kahane goes from Hollywood to the RKO sales convention at Chicago this week.

SCHOOL AND SCREEN

by
RITA C. McGOLDRICK

THE month is rich in motion pictures. Four outstanding productions, and a number of admirable short features, make this one of the most fruitful months of the year in high grade screen entertainment. School and Screen presents the following selections for your thoughtful consideration.

"So Big"

Edna Ferber's prize winning novel, "So Big," has been translated to the screen by Warner Brothers, who have succeeded in producing a sensitive and beautiful version of the strong story. Miss Ferber, with the earnestness of the true artist, gave to her book the authentic essence of the soil, the reality of self-sacrifice, the suffering of mother love. For these qualities her story was chosen as the best novel of its year. With Barbara Stanwyck in the leading role as Selina the Mother, young Dickie Moore as the small boy, George Brent and Hardie Albright in the assisting cast, sustained interest in the plot, fine photography and brilliant directing, we have all the ingredients of a great picture. Every reviewing group has used the word "inspiring" and rated it as excellent entertainment for family audiences, as well as for all discriminating adults.

In this picture, Barbara Stanwyck has had to develop her character from the young happy-go-lucky Mother, with life spread out before her, to the older and saddened woman for whom the years behind have spelled tragedy.

The picture has a note of poignancy for its adaptation is the last literary work of J. Grubb Alexander, who died in Los Angeles a few weeks ago after a distinguished career as a writer. Mr. Alexander has been one of the leading members of Warner Brothers' staff of scenarists and dialogue writers for over two years and had been associated with the production of many famous pictures.

"Cry of the World"

The first offering of the International Film Foundation is titled "The Cry of the World," and it is truly a tremendous cry wrung from the heart of a suffering humanity in behalf of world peace. With vivid, moving drama, it tells the story of the devastation by the World War. We see the barbarism of its methods, the trenches with the dying and the dead; our boys and the boys of the whole world striking bayonets into each other. We are reminded of the lethal gas, shrapnel, machine guns clicking death-dealing bullets with as much composure as a typewriter clicking its keys. Everywhere, we see death, horrible suffering, wanton destruction. The screen tells us the staggering statistics of the carnage; the millions of human lives that were sacrificed; the billions of dollars of loss; the frightful burden that the war placed upon the world, the full impact of which we are only feeling now in the back wash of unavoidable economic depression.

This picture, with a sudden gripping reality, moves itself onward to the other aftermaths of war—to Sovietism in Russia, to Fascism and Socialism as we see it massed in frightening crowds and a growing terrifying power in Italy and Germany, to the Red uprisings in the streets of the orderly city of New York, in the march of the hungry of America to the steps of Washington's capitol. In each instance we see crowds in emotional upheaval—not crowds as we know them ordinarily, but fearful crushes of humanity burning with a new urge. One sees in this terrifying unrest the true aftermath of the war; there is something of false value in it, of a strange new shifting of values. It brings thoughtful people to their knees with a need for prayer. There has been no picture ever that has brought to me so much of fearful reality as this "Cry of the World," which has picked up by the truthful eye of the camera, the tragedy of China, the selfishness of Japan, the power and ambition of Russia and of Italy, the demands of Germany, the complacence of France, as this picture has done.

And then it goes further than this. It develops the sequences in our own American national life that spell unrest. Prohibition, for instance. It shows us the pros and the cons of Prohibition, and in these filmed proofs gives us something of brilliance. The picture tells us of the part that organized woman has played in this whole international turbulence. Every normal woman is interested in world peace. She is interested in the affairs of the League of Nations and the World Court, which the picture shows us in various sessions. She is interested in temperance more positively than she is interested in Prohibition. After years of travail she has brought forth a keen, a wise, a new viewpoint that is sane, tempered and far-seeing.

The film "The Cry of the World" should go on the highways and byways of every land. Its message is unanswerable. It is not an advertising stunt but a great plea for the protection of humanity. It stands for something greater in daily living than the destruction of the home and the family. For that reason those of us interested in the possibilities of the apostolate of the screen believe that pictures like "The Cry of the World" have a mission that must be encouraged and fostered. To every thoughtful person interested in world peace, normalcy, court justice among the nations, the protection of the weak against the conscienceless of the arrogant—here is a visual message which must be of supreme importance, particularly to parents, teachers and students.

The International Film Foundation has for its purpose the producing of specialized teaching films for classrooms, clubs, school auditoriums and general distribution. The proceeds of this enterprise will be devoted to making school films and to assist educational institutions in the purchase of films and motion picture projection equipment. The International Film Foundation, forward-looking in vision and in purpose, hopes to lease and sell motion picture films to educational institutions at cost. It is making an intensive survey of the motion picture field and will make special recommendations of meritorious films. It will also furnish educational institutions with all information relating to the latest developments in the motion picture industry.

"The Doomed Battalion"

One of the most amazing pictures that it has been our privilege to see has come into the Universal studios from foreign laboratories. It is titled "The Doomed Battalion" and features three little known stars. It is, however, a most important picture of the Great War and is of exceptional value because it tells the story of a section of fighting of which we have heard very little, and of which great drama may be written. We see a small village in the Tyrol in Austria where the people, living peacefully, are shocked at the sudden announcement of war and an unexpected call to service. Between them on the Italian border are the giant heights of snow-topped mountains, with their fields of glacier and ice sparkling in the sun. On the other side of the mountains have lived their friends who, overnight, become their enemies.

A simple romantic story has a fresh twist of appeal, perhaps because the whole picture sweeps one out of oneself into the dazzling reality of a frozen world, with its extraordinary panorama of snow, its peaks higher than the clouds, its glittering whiteness of beauty filling one with awe at its grandeur. There is a blinding snow storm which decorates the pines and fir trees of the lower levels, making them look like heroic carvings in marble. There are the most amazing skiing sequences in this picture that have ever come to the screen.

But this film has something more than glorious photography. It has strong drama in its war scenes, which reaches its climax when the Doomed Battalion, billeted on the peak of Mount Collalto, learns that the enemy is undermining their position with dynamite. In their sleepless nights in the lonely snow-bound shacks at the top of the word, they hear the subterranean drilling and its vibrations undermine their courage and morale.

"The Doomed Battalion" will find its way in the list of immortal war pictures. Absolutely clean, without a line or word of vulgarity, with more of sheer beauty and glory than any fifty pictures usually possess, we recommend it to you as an example of outstanding entertainment and cinematic achievement.

"South Sea Adventures"

Zane Grey, novelist and sportsman, adventured into the South Seas in quest of great fish. On his yacht, The Fisherman, he finds his way among strange islands, turbulent waters, into the hunting ground of the most surprising varieties of deep sea creatures. Those who have known the thrill of the rod and reel will find a grand screen adventure in this fishing expedition in unexplored waters and among strange reefs, where the sportsmen land fish weighing more than a ton apiece. This picture has beautiful photographic background; brilliant waterfalls, tropical foliage, sparkling water, and all the thrills in the world.

Added to these unusual features, Paramount has given us "When a Feller Needs a Friend," which while excellent entertainment for young people does not lend itself to the School and Screen questionnaire for pupils. Paramount has also presented the fine aviation picture "Sky Bride," which has received the enthusiastic endorsement of all critical groups as an example of fast moving and clean entertainment. "Sky Bride" is the name of an aviator's plane in which he performs thrilling stunts in his day's routine.

This array of pictures in one month is heartening. It offers to the young people of the country a wide choice in films that will please as well as instruct them.

*This picture is of outstanding importance to educators and students, because it is an authentic camera record of stirring world events that are reshaping the political, economic and religious life of all nations. ### UNIVERSAL

Feature Players: Luis Trenker, Tala Birell, Victor Virani.

This foreign picture has so much of extraordinary photographic beauty and unusual war drama that it must be listed among the great war pictures that have come to the screen. Filmed among the snowy peaks in the Austrian Tyrol, it shows that fighting sector of which we have known too little. The foreign actors are convincing, their slight accent in no way interfering with the picture's strong appeal.

SLIM CHANCE HELD FOR COPYRIGHT LEGISLATION

Copyright legislation will not be enacted into law for at least one year. This became evident the other day when, appearing before the House of Representatives rules committee to argue for a rule giving the measure early consideration, Representative William I. Sirovich of New York, chairman of the patents committee—surgeon, dramatist and critic of critics—waged a lone fight against other members of his own committee who declared in no uncertain terms that the pending copyright bill and the way it had been handled were anything but satisfactory.

Opposition to the granting of the rule was expressed by Representatives Lanham of Texas, McLeod of Michigan, Gilchrist of Iowa and Bloom of New York, who declared that there was no neeed for haste in disposing of the legislation. The rule granted last session to the Vestal copyright bill, urged by Sirovich as a precedent, it was explained, was given because of the fact that there was in the Vestal bill an effort to put the United States into the International Copyright Bureau before the expiration of the time set for entry.

Take Sirovich to Task

Members of the committee took Sirovich severely to task for the manner in which the legislation has been handled, declaring that the bill itself has been the subject of no hearings, that the hearings which were held were on the general question of copyright. Further, it was asserted, the measure written by Sirovich was so unsatisfactory that it had to be withdrawn from the House three times for committee amendment.

The bill, according to Representative Lanham, is a "confusion" and "a radical departure from any other measure the committee has ever reported." Sirovich countered to these charges by asserting that Lanham had not attended a single hearing, which the latter admitted, pointing out, however, that in the eight years he has served as a member of the committee he has heard all the arguments many times and had no need to refresh his memory.

Instead of issuing a rule to give the bill precedence, the committee was told by McLeod, the measure should be sent back to the committee in order that the motion picture industry might present their grievances which, he said, do not appear, in the light of a letter sent him by Abram F. Myers, president of Allied States, to have been assuaged by the Sirovich provisions.

The hearing was further enlivened by charges by Sirovich that Representative Bloom was representing the American Society of Composers, Authors and Publishers. This was met by the assertion by Bloom that "nobody knows anything about the bill" and that the motion picture industry has millions of dollars involved in the legislation.

Decide to Defer Action

At an executive session following the hearing, the rules committee decided to defer action on Sirovich's application, which means that no rule will be offered and the bill will have to take its chance in the House. It is unlikely that any effort will be made by House leaders to take the measure up this session, the debate during last week's hearing showing that a long time would be required for consideration and amendment of the measure.

One of the factors involved in the proposed legislation has been the fight by Allied States to have the status of print holdovers by exhibitors changed from that of a copyright violation to a contractual violation.

In a message to its members sent out from Washington this week, executives of Allied commended "the team work of the Allied members" in flattening Congressman Sirovich "against a stone wall of exhibitor opposition" toward the Sirovich version of the bill. Allied charged that Sirovich tried to get the House rules committee to "railroad the bill through Congress."

New York Censor Approves "Scarface" With Title Shift

The New York state censor board on Wednesday passed Howard Hughes' "Scarface" with the provision that the film be released as "Scarface, the Shame of a Nation." No deletions were ordered.

In all advertising, the word "Scarface" will be in large type, while the rest of the title will be smaller. The picture is scheduled to follow "Freaks" into the New York Rialto. Only a few state boards have as yet not passed on the film.

Chicago Musicians To Share All Work Says Union Ruling

The Board of Directors of the Chicago Federation of Musicians has passed two new rulings, one to the effect that any musician member working on a full seven-day engagement, must take one day off each week; the other that musicians earning $75 per week or more, are not permitted to play any other engagement.

According to president James C. Petrillo of the organization, the rulings were made necessary as a means of relieving the serious unemployment situation among musicians, and because a "gentlemen's agreement," entered into by all contractors and leaders in January, 1931, has failed. Petrillo states in this connection: "At least 95 per cent of the contractors and leaders who so solemnly pledged their word to spread the work have failed to live up to that promise."

Anti-Trust Suit Set for This Week

Distributors are scheduled to be defendants this week in the second federal court action within two months at Lincoln, Neb., where the Nick Paper anti-trust suit is to go on trial. The Youngclaus trial, testing the legality of protection, was recently completed.

Paper is suing the Omaha Film Board of Trade and several distributors for $1,131,111, as triple damages for alleged boycott under arbitration rules. He had failed to pay deposits, it is claimed, after a decision in favor of Universal was rendered against him. The suit is based on alleged forced closing of his Sun theatre in Lincoln. Another suit involving the Capitol theatre is pending, but only the Sun case comes up for trial during the May term. Arthur Mullen of Omaha will act as defense attorney for distributors, as he did in the Youngclaus suit, while Max V. Beghtol will represent Paper.

The Universal decision against the exhibitor was based on the now void arbitration clause in the standard contract, which was eliminated by the supreme court in the Paramount case.

STRANGE CASE OF CLARA DEANE

Paramount 78 minutes

MADAM X is back with just as many, or more, tears in the form of another "mother love" story, but one so well told that it is bound to hold the audience's interest and make them shed plenty of tears.

In many theatres, tear-jerkers are always sure fire for box office results. Those houses will do business. The others may not break any records, but they, too, will find that this type of screen fare is highly acceptable for the masses.

The title has plenty of b. o. appeal and should attract interest if only because of its intriguing qualities. Names to support it are not too strong for most spots, but, like the picture itself, ought to be just as acceptable. Wynne Gibson tops anything she ever acted in before with a splendid performance that ought to skyrocket her to marquee proportions. Frances De is "Dee"-lightful and lovable as the daughter. Pat O'Brien is good because he plays the part of a rotten crook. Dudley Diggs is deserving of mention by reason of his own splendid characterization of the hard-boiled, but sympathetic police officer.

"Audience value" is your strongest point and insures good word-of-mouth publicity for the picture from the very first showing in your house. For the New York opening they deliberately left the cast names entirely out of the advance and opening day advertisements. This seemed good judgment, because it gave them every opportunity to play up the title and the catchlines to create interest. Whether the same idea is practical for other cities is a question to be determined by the individual showmen who are to exploit this attraction.

While not suitable for kids, it can be played where you see it. We suggest that you back it up with a strong campaign because it deserves it even more so than many other pictures that might sound questionable as to box office draw. The Paramount campaign book is unusually good and offers a wealth of good selling ideas that can be revamped to suit most any theatre catering to family trade. Tieup possibilities are very good, with a great variety to draw from. Ad suggestions will be found particularly good for smaller towns and cities where no ad artist is available. There are plenty of good catch lines and advertising slants.

If tears were worth a quarter apiece you'd be sailing for a European vacation after you play this one. So play up that mother and daughter theme, the mother love slant, and give it all you've got in the way of a heart-throb campaign. It always gets them.

YOUNG AMERICA

Fox 70 minutes

WHILE far from a good picture, this one possesses enough slants to make the selling of it a simple task. The children's court angle, the two chums and the moral it is supposed to convey, are all seat-selling possibilities that should be capitalized to the fullest extent.

The title is not too strong and the cast does not offer any too much help in the advertising of it. While Spencer Tracy undoubtedly has a following it must be kept in mind that this story does not revolve around him as the main character. Ditto for Doris Kenyon. They both do well with what they have to do, but that is not enough to bill them as the stars of this picture unless you are not particular how you kid your public along. It's the youngster, Tommy Conlon, who is the star and the pivot of everything. But since Tommy's name won't drag them to the box office you'll have to make up for it in your campaign.

"Audience value" is above average, and while the picture is slow in getting started—almost to the point where you begin to think it is a sermon—it holds the interest and builds up sympathy for the kids who are involved in the story.

The children's court angle is one of the best selling slants and should be used as a foundation for your newspaper ads. Tieups with children's welfare organization, schools and civic authorities should be simple but profitable all around.

Get the press book from Fox on this one and read it through. It will show you several excellent ways of making this one come through for your house. It can be played anywhere, so don't be afraid of where you book it.

STATE'S ATTORNEY

RKO Radio 79 minutes

IN "State's Attorney" you have a powerful, business-getting picture of the kind that will click in every type of theatre. The only objection I have to the entire picture lies in the over-elaborate settings of some of the apartment scenes. This sort of stuff always detracts from the believable aspects of a production in most every spot outside of those cities where such apartments actually exist, and truth compels me to state that even here in New York I've seen few that could even hold a candle to a motion picture apartment done in the modern manner.

The title can be made positive box office by building up a strong advertising campaign and, naturally, tying it together with John Barrymore's name and Helen Twelvetrees. In addition to those two names you should, by all means, plug William Boyd, too. He gives a swell performance and one that helps the picture tremendously. The catchlines that work best are about the lawyer who first defended, then prosecuted the criminal classes. And John Barrymore handles the star spot magnificently. While some may find him a bit draggy during the courtroom scenes, his fine acting will fade everything else into the background.

It will hold any audience from start to finish and the producers deserve a couple of medals for the diplomatic ending. There's no huddle or strangle hold or obvious stuff, and that's just why the picture has a natural-like finish.

Kids will not appreciate this picture and there are enough situations to warrant playing away from Sundays where the theatre must be careful of such angles. But whatever else you play it you can rest assured that you will do business and plenty of it. Never mind all those attorney pictures now coming through in abundance; this one is in a class by itself and your box office will confirm our faith in its drawing powers. Get behind it and make sure that every prospective customer knows you are to play it.

WORLD AND THE FLESH

Paramount 74 minutes

DOING business with this one is purely a matter of show-selling and not of the picture's merits. The story is weak and many times draggy. The cast is good, but not in tune with the background, and when weighed in the balance will be found wanting in many respects.

It will require help in more ways than one. Be prepared to build up as interesting a campaign as common sense will allow. Stress the two leading characters above the title. Then back it up with some outstanding support that can be sold along with the feature.

Best played away from either kid days or Sundays, especially in the smaller towns and cities. CHARLES E. LEWIS

State's Attorney

(Radio)

Courtroom Drama

John Barrymore, in a somewhat different type of role, as the state's attorney evolving from a large criminal practice, gives a strong interpretation of the role, emphasizing the drama and playing with the rather clever lines, in a manner which kept an audience at the crowded RKO Mayfair in New York in close attendance on the screen. The film takes its place with the others of the current courtroom, district attorney cycle of screen plays.

The drama which carries the burden of the story is amply and intelligently relieved by comedy, for the most part developing from dialogue and its rendition, particularly by Barrymore, rather than from acting, as such. That the comedy was well drawn and aptly applied seemed obvious from the ready and hearty response from the patrons.

Barrymore is supported in particular by Helen Twelvetrees, William Boyd. The leading player is a wealthy criminal lawyer, whose chief client is Boyd, owner of gambling houses, speakeasies. His place is raided; Barrymore, at night court, comes upon Miss Twelvetrees, being framed through Boyd's men, and on sudden whim causes her acquittal. She becomes his mistress, falls in love with him. Politically powerful, Oscar Apfel makes overtures to Barrymore, begins to groom him for the post of state's attorney, with the governor's chair in the offing.

Barrymore accepts, breaks with Boyd, tells him to watch his step. Jill Esmond, Apfel's daughter, is roundly taken up by the dramatic manner of Barrymore's courtroom tactics, pursues him avidly, and in one of Barrymore's more or less continuous drunken moments, marries him. Miss Twelvetrees is badly hurt, and leaves. Barrymore has the marriage annulled. Boyd kills a gangster who had attempted his life. Miss Twelvetrees is the only witness. Then the dramatic highlight of the film, containing something of melodrama, but vigorously effective, chiefly through the work of Barrymore. Not caring to cross-examine Miss Twelvetrees, on the stand as defense witness, Barrymore plans to lose the case, when Boyd utters a throaty laugh, which proves a mistake. The state's attorney recalls the witness, traps her into a proof of Boyd's guilt, then announces to the courtroom a criminal episode in his own past, resigns, renounces the gubernatorial opportunity and walks off with Miss Twelvetrees for what is to be assumed

The World and the Flesh

(Paramount)

Drama

Herein a drama of the Russia of the transition period, when the royalists, or White Russians, were driven from the country and made hasty efforts to escape the pursuing Reds, or Bolsheviki. George Bancroft, given full play for his physique and thundering voice, is the leader of a band of Red sailors, marauders, and on the heels of a group of emigrees, virtually led by Miriam Hopkins.

Several opening shots, indicating the transition period, from Czarism to Terrorism, are ably handled by the camera and drew the attention of the audience at the New York Paramount. At Theodosia, the emigrees await ship for Sebastopol and safety, when Bancroft and his men storm the town, take the fleeing royalists as their captives, and prepare to hold them for the firing squad. White Russian troops come to the rescue, after Bancroft had given Miss Hopkins the opportunity to save her life, and she refuses.

Bancroft and his men are put into the stoke hole, in irons, on the ship bound for Sebastopol, but succeed in overpowering the guards and taking possession of the ship, which is headed back to Theodosia and the Reds, now in possession. A plan is set, whereby Miss Hopkins pretends she has fallen in love with Bancroft, in order to keep him in his cabin, while a magnet and the stupidity of the peasants on guard are relied upon to cover a turn of the ship and return to Sebastopol.

Miss Hopkins' pretension becomes a reality and the peasants' stupidity is a mistake because the ship docks at Theodosia next morning. Bancroft's attempt to save her is futile, and he takes her from jail, permits her to escape and gives himself up to the committee. She returns to stay with him, and at the opportune moment Bancroft's sailors appear, hold up the proceedings and march out with Bancroft in the lead and Miss Hopkins in his arms.

Produced and distributed by Paramount. Directed by John Cromwell. Screen play by Oliver H. P. Garrett. From a play by Philipp Zeska and Ernst Spitz. Photographed by Karl Struss. Release date April 22, 1932. Running time, 74 minutes.

Juvenile Drama

Almost in the nature of propaganda for the correctional, as opposed to the institutional straightening of the child accused of wrongdoing, is this production, directed with feeling by Frank Borzage. Also implied, is the necessity for examination into the home life of the boy, and the indication that very nearly all such cases have their origin in the broken home, where proper attention, guidance, are not given the child delinquent.

As the understanding judge of the juvenile court, Ralph Bellamy was well received by an audience at the Roxy in New York. Spencer Tracy offers the drug store owner who has no tolerance for the lad he thinks is crooked; Doris Kenyon, his wife, with very much the opposite idea concerning the same boy; Beryl Mercer, able character actress, as the grandmother of one of the two boys principally involved in the film.

Tommy Conlon and Raymond Borzage are the two lads, each offering a portrayal which evoked appreciative response from the patrons. Conlon, accused of taking rides in other people's automobiles, is paroled by Bellamy after a lecture. Miss Kenyon becomes interested in the boy, who lives with a dour, bitter aunt, played by Sarah Padden. The two boys stay with Borzage's grandmother, Miss Mercer, that night, and when she is stricken with an attack of illness, the boys make futile attempts to waken the druggist for a new supply of her medicine. Finally they break into the store, and leaving, Conlon is caught.

They lie to save each other, when Miss Mercer appears, tells the truth, and Miss Padden refuses to take Conlon back. Bellamy forbids the boys to see each other. Miss Kenyon requests guardianship of the boy, over her husband's protest, he promising Conlon will fail her. Miss Kenyon and Tracy leave the house for the evening, asking Conlon to remain there. Miss Mercer appears, tells him Borzage is very ill, asking for him. He gives her money he finds, goes to see Borzage, who dies. Returning, Conlon finds the two quarreling over him, and leaves.

He sees Tracy being held up in his store and is taken captive in the robbers' car. Tracy pursues, and when one of the bandits attempts to shoot him, Conlon wrecks the car. Tracy takes the boy in and prepares to adopt him as the film concludes. A spot or two of comedy relieves the tension of the dramatic film.

Strange Love of Molly Louvain

(First National)

Drama

Ann Dvorak plays the lead as the girl who makes an earnest attempt to make something of her life, and who very nearly fails in the attempt, in this screen adaptation of the play, "Tinsel Girl," by Maurine Watkins. Two men do the wrong thing, two men do the right, the last one saving her after he had nearly wrecked her life.

The work of Lee Tracy as the smart newspaper man, who misjudges Miss Dvorak, but comes through in the end, impressed and amused an audience at the New York Strand with his fast-moving, natural portrayal of the reporter.

Miss Dvorak, working in a hotel, is about to marry wealthy Donald Dilloway when he leaves town, deserting her. She gravitates to Leslie Fenton, unsavory traveling salesman, who has been making advances. Richard Cromwell, as a bell-hop, is in love with Miss Dvorak. She and Fenton are married, she has a daughter by another man, and Fenton is wanted by the police. She leaves him, takes a job as a dance hall hostess, there meets Cromwell. The two are accosted by Fenton, are maneuvered into a car Fenton stole, and are left therein when Fenton, pursued by the police, kills an officer, is himself wounded.

The police are looking for Miss Dvorak, Cromwell, who hide out in a furnished apartment, where they are interrupted by Tracy, garrulous scandal reporter, who falls in love with Miss Dvorak. He asks her to leave with him, and she accepts after sending Cromwell away. Tracy meanwhile stages a radio appeal for the missing girl, which is broadcast by the police as a ruse to bring in the wanted accomplice. Miss Dvorak responds, is put through a third degree by the police, while the reporters await the outcome. A confession of some sort is obtained, and Miss Dvorak is permitted to see the child, learns the trap which has been set. Tracy comes in with the other reporters and sees his prospective mistress as the object of his successful stunt.

A revelation, it is understood, takes place within the person of Tracy and he promises not only to see her through the impending criminal action, but also to marry her to make amends in a measure.

The Strange Case of Clara Deane

(Paramount)

Drama

Wynne Gibson, in the role of the girl who is sent to prison through the acts of a criminal husband, and who thereby loses identity, her daughter and her self respect, passing through a period of some 20 years, held an audience at the Rialto in New York with her portrayal.

The film, containing something in the nature of melodrama, and revolving about the central theme of mother's love for daughter, is taken from the play by Arthur Brilant. Important in the supporting cast are Pat O'Brien as the husband; Dudley Digges, more than well known on the legitimate stage, as the officer and later police inspector; Frances Dee as the daughter after the mother's release from prison. Cora Sue Collins played the daughter as a child, with appeal and ability, it was agreed.

O'Brien marries Miss Gibson, taking her from the dressmaking establishment of Lee Kohlmar, where she is an able designer. O'Brien's gambling and criminality result in the murder of an officer, pursuing him, with his wife and child, after a roadside holdup. Both are sent to prison for 15 years. Digges is the officer in the case, and, it is revealed later, adopts the daughter, Miss Dee.

When Miss Gibson leaves prison, broken, old before her time, she is given a position as a fitter by Kohlmar. Digges warns her to cease her search for the daughter she has been forced to renounce, on the ground that the girl's life would be ruined, were she to learn the truth. When Miss Dee is about to marry Russell Gleason she goes to the dress house for her clothes, and Miss Gibson is forced to fit her, unaware of her identity. At the girl's home, prior to the wedding, she guesses the truth, is warned away by Digges, and accidentally meets her husband, also released. He discovers the facts, goes with a photograph with the intention of blackmail. Miss Gibson follows, kills him, is seen by Digges. He realizes she has no intention of revealing her

Hell's Headquarters

(Mayfair)

Melodrama

Mayfair offers a melodramatic effort, featuring Jack Mulhall and Barbara Weeks, with Frank Mayo as the heavy, and concerning a search for an ivory cache in the Congo, the almost successful robbery of the cache by Mayo, and the romance of Miss Weeks and Mulhall.

The picture contains its quota of animals and jungle settings fairly authentic in appearance. Mulhall, famed ivory hunter, hears of the death in the Congo of the partner with whom he had cached a large quantity of tusks. Word comes from his gun-bearer, played by Everett Brown, negro, and Mulhall, suspecting the death was not accidental, leaves for Africa. Mayo sends for his former sweetheart, Miss Weeks, and her father, Phillips Smalley, planning that they should supply the equipment of an expedition to find the ivory.

Mulhall arrives, has Brown act as guard for the expedition, and follows the safari. Just before they arrive at the location of the cache, a leopard attacks Miss Weeks at night, and Mulhall appears opportunely to save her. At the scene of the ivory hideout Mulhall forces from Mayo a confession that he killed Mulhall's partner. Mayo, escaping into the jungle, is killed by lions, and the indication is that Miss Weeks is not too sorry, since Mulhall is ready to act as substitute.

Produced and distributed by Mayfair. Directed by Andrew L. Stone. Story and continuity by Merton S. Parker. Edited by Frank Atkinson. Sound, Earl N. Crain. Cameraman, Jules Cronjager. Release date, May 15, 1932. Running time, 63 minutes.

Trapeze

(Protex)

German Drama

This story of circus life and the triangular complications which develop from a peculiarly daring trapeze act, was directed and supervised by E. A. Dupont, who handled the famed "Variety," starring Emil Jannings a few years back, and features the actress Anna Sten, who has but recently arrived in Hollywood for American film work. The Protex Trading Corporation is distributing in this country, the company being the distribution arm of Leo Brecher, promoter of foreign films in this country. It is showing at his Little Carnegie Playhouse in New York.

Contributing probably more than any other factors to the interest of the audience were, on the one hand, the work of Miss Sten; on the other, the manner in which Dupont continuously strives for, and in a measure achieves innumerable unusual camera angles, producing bizarre detail effects of people and objects, which at least demonstrate the facility of the camera, add significance to the atmosphere of the extraordinary which is the circus.

The story concerns Anna Sten, as the newly arrived Russian bareback rider at the German circus; Reinhold Bernt, Adolf Wohlbrueck, animal attendants. The circus is financially in difficulty when Curt Gerron, in the character role of the mechanic, shows his new and daring contrivance which spins a couple high in the air and finally hurtles them on two trapezes released by mechanism by an attendant upon whom their safety depends.

Miss Sten and Bernt undertake the stunt, considered certain death, after she goads him into taking the risk, calling the bluff of his continued bragging. They become famous. Wohlbrueck, his best friend, operates the lever. Bernt falls, is crippled, and takes the lever in his friend's place, while the latter assumes the partnership in the act. Miss Sten marries Bernt out of sympathy, but is in love with Wohlbrueck, who returns the feeling. Bernt learns of the situation, is completely stunned as he takes the lever for the last appearance of the act for the season. The guilty couple believe they are doomed, as they take their places for the performance. Bernt's thought, however, is not of vengeance, we understand, but he is so disturbed that he moves the lever a second too late. Miss Sten catches the end of a rope, her partner makes the trapeze, and rescues her high in the air. Bernt resigns, walks out of the show, leaving the two together.

Produced by Harmonie-Film. Distributed by Protex Trading Corp. Directed and supervised by E. A. Dupont. Story by Alfred Machard. Manuscript adaptation by Rudolf Katscher and Egon Eis. Photographed by Friedel Behn-Grund and Akos Farkas. Sound, Walter Rushland. Music by Paul Dessau. Release date, May 2, 1932. Running time, 80 minutes.

Rack Track Drama

Buck Jones, generally found astride a pony in the cow country and behind a neck kerchief and under a sombrero, here is astride a racing car, behind goggles and under a driver's helmet, as an auto racing driver.

The majority of the film is occupied with the crashing, rushing footage of the tracks. A neighborhood New York theatre audience seemed rather moderately entertained by the effort. Jones becomes the guardian of appealing little Micky McGuire, whose father has died as a result of injuries sustained in a race. Jones joins William Walling as partner, Walling being the manufacturer of a new motor and anxious to win a race as an advertisement for the motor. The group opposing Walling has so far succeeded in scotching every attempt, and Jones enters determined to win, and planning to use the resultant money for an operation on Mickey, a cripple.

Wallace MacDonald, pretending to be suitor for the hand of Loretta Sayers, Walling's daughter, is in reality a gang henchman. Jones goes through a fence and is barred from racing, with MacDonald largely responsible for the order. Jones joins the police force, corners one of MacDonald's men in a holdup and digs out the rest of the evidence to confirm his suspicions of crooked work. Incidentally, he takes Miss Sayers as a bonus for his good work, but she is not at all unwilling.

Fair Comedy

Another of the Torchy series from the short stories by Sewell Ford, with Ray Cooke, freckled and robust, as the bubbling office boy who makes life miserable for office manager Frank Pangborn and aids boss Edmund Breese. This time he saves Breese from an embarrassing situation and the loss of a fat contract, after a plane ride with boss's daughter, Patsy Bellamy. A fair comedy effort.—Running time, 20 minutes.

Perfect Control

(Universal)

Good

The youngsters will go for this short for all they are worth, because Babe Ruth shows them how to pitch a fast ball, a curve, a knuckle ball, and demonstrates the keenness of his batting eye. A schoolroom story, involving Franklin Pangborn as the bespectacled teacher, and the dream of a pupil who falls asleep over his arithmetic lesson, is well done, serving excellently to present the subject matter. The rapidly evolving baseball season makes the short especially worth while.—Running time, 9 minutes.

Only Fair

Karl Dane prefers sleeping to anything else and George Arthur induces him, with their wives, to rough it a bit on a trip. There is little that is active or particularly amusing in the number, and an audience at the New York Rialto seemed but little enthused.—Running time, 20 minutes.

Secretary Preferred

(RKO)

Action

There is rapidity of pace in this Van Beuren produced number for RKO release which makes it a highly satisfactory short. Taken from one of the Liberty Magazine short stories, it concerns the plan of a pair of crooks to have an emerald necklace delivered to the office of a man about town. Then they call, say it was a mistake, and retrieve the jewel. Before the plan becomes effective, however, he makes a present of the necklace to his secretary, which spoils the plan not a little. Sustains the interest well.—Running time, 11 minutes.

40 THEATRES TO START JUNIOR SHOW

700 Turn Out for Tribute to Thomas

The testimonial banquet tendered at the Astor Hotel in New York on Monday night by the Eastern division of the motion picture industry is now history, but it might well long be remembered by the 700-odd film people who attended as one of the most impressive tributes ever paid to an executive—independent or otherwise. Representatives of practically every important organization were there, joined by independent and circuit operators, leading distribution executives, friends and competitors of Thomas in the state rights field. They came all the way from Chicago and Detroit to honor the chief of First Division Pictures, and from Washington, Philadelphia, Scranton, Pittsburgh, northern New Jersey, Albany, Buffalo, Long Island and elsewhere.

The affair got under way promptly at 8:30 P.M. when Rudolph Sanders, chairman of the committee and an exhibitor from Brooklyn, sounded the gavel to introduce Louis Nizer, of the New York Film Board, as toast-and-roastmaster. Mr. Thomas was the first victim, Nizer taking him merrily over the hurdles with a verbal description of some of the pre-film activities of the distributor.

Next heard from was Sidney Samuelson, who brought the best wishes of independent members of Allied. He was followed by Michael O'Toole, of the MPTOA, who extended felicitations "on behalf of the rest of the independents who are not represented by Mr. Samuelson's organization."

Harry Kosch, operating the Roxy in New York spoke from the dias and so did Ned Depinet and others; all voiced glowing tributes to the honor guest, who was advised by Al Lichtman not to take the testimonial too seriously "because if you don't make good pictures you're mud."

Children Storm Brooklyn House In Experimental Show; Rita McGoldrick Hostess; Circuit Plans to Continue Policy

Forty Brooklyn theatres of the Randforce Amusement Company will immedately put into operation a policy of junior matinees for children, after a line of children that extended for three blocks, stormed the Carlton theatre last Saturday at the first of these performances, in the nature of an experiment by the circuit.

Rita C. McGoldrick, who conducts the Junior Show department of MOTION PICTURE HERALD, and is herself a Brooklyn resident, acted as hostess and chaperon at the Saturday performance, and had been primarily responsible for inducing the circuit to inaugurate the junior matinee policy.

Street traffic was halted, police help was enlisted at the Carlton as the children waited to enter the house. It is pointed out, in this connection, that the theatre is in a section where few children have attended motion picture theatres, and the Carlton has numbered its child attendance as a very small percentage of the total audience. On hand to welcome the youngsters, who ranged in age from two to 16, and in some instances were accompanied by parents, was Uncle Robert, extremely well known to children through his radio programs designed for their enjoyment.

The admission at Saturday's performance was 15 cents, with the option to those present of remaining for the regular show following the junior matinee at no additional charge. On the program were a newsreel, a short of an educational nature, two features selected from the approved lists of club reviewing groups, and community songs. A floating American flag appeared on the screen at the opening of the performance, which drew the children promptly to their feet to sing "The Star Spangled Banner," as rendered on the organ.

It is planned to give the shows at the Randforce houses, which were taken over from Fox Theatres some time ago, on Saturday, either in the morning or early afternoon, every two weeks or once each month, in accordance with the continued success of the policy. The movement thus inaugurated in Brooklyn follows similar successful ventures in cities over the country.

Von Sternberg and Miss Dietrich Return

Josef von Sternberg will direct "The Blonde Venus," Paramount picture, over which he disagreed with studio officials, after refusing to accept the script handed him by B. P. Schulberg. Marlene Dietrich, who followed von Sternberg from the set, will take the leading role as originally intended.

A statement from Paramount on the situation said: "Paramount's declared right to control the screen activities of artists and directors under contract was reaffirmed. . . ." Von Sternberg stated: "I still believe I was right in seeking to test whether a director and an artist can be compelled under their contracts to direct and perform in any story assigned to them. When it became apparent, however, that the final determination of this test could not be recorded for at least a year, and when I realized that this process might keep Miss Dietrich from the screen for that length of time I felt this to be unfair both to her and to the motion picture public, and so I decided to settle my differences with Paramount out of consideration for the interests of the star."

St. Louis Firm Income $41,470

The St. Louis Amusement Company, controlled by Warner and now in receivership, had a net operating income of $41,470.48 for the period from November 26, 1931, to April 1, 1932, according to a report filed by the receivers, Roy F. Britton and Henri Chouteau.

THEATRE RECEIPTS

The total of theatre receipts from 189 theatres in 31 major cities of the country for the calendar week ended May 7, 1932, showed a gain of $183,583 over the previous calendar week, ended April 30, when 183 houses in 30 cities recorded $2,193,153. The total for the more recent seven-day period reached $2,376,736. Two new high individual record figures were established during the later week, at the Strand in Des Moines and Kirby in Houston, both with MGM's "Grand Hotel," while four new low record grosses were recorded. This compares with one new "high" and 11 new "lows" during the preceding week.

MANAGERS' ROUND TABLE CLUB

CONDUCTED BY AN EXHIBITOR FOR EXHIBITORS

BREAK DOWN THE BARRIERS!

ON the next page one of our versatile Club cartoonists, Dick Kirschbaum, has ably illustrated the theme of this week's chat. In fact he has illustrated it so well that after a first glance we were inclined to omit all further comment and let the cartoon tell the whole story.

It is not our intention to make any ridiculous statements or hints that everybody in show-business has gone haywire. Neither will we imply that every circuit chief, district manager or divisional director is incompetent. They, as well as the rest of us, are only human. If they are tackling their jobs, handling their divisions and districts and covering the home office contact points to the dissatisfaction of the men in the field who are responsible for the operation of the theatres, then it might be a good idea to take stock and determine, within reason, where the fault lies.

Kirschbaum's cartoon is not an accident. It is a direct shot at the bull's eye of circuit operation based upon actual observation. We wanted to emphasize our point so strongly that instead of expressing ourselves in type alone we asked Kirschbaum to make up the cartoon.

During the past year we have seen any number of houses pass from national circuit control to smaller and more local groups. We're not shouting, "we told you so" because too many other hundreds predicted the same condition just as far back as we did. But circuit control would have been far more successful if someone with sufficient power and authority could have had an enlarged picture of Kirschbaum's cartoon hanging on the wall where it would be visible all the time.

Home office interference with the local house manager and his policies; constant orders and counter-orders from the district and division chiefs, and last, but of still greater importance, the endless amount of red-tape and budget cutting of merchandising funds which generally comes through the home office and seemingly disregards any local condition.

The present budget slashing, salary cutting and other unusual means being taken to reduce overhead seems to be a definite indication that the circuits are still battling to keep out of the deep, deep red. Whether they arrived at that condition via the present economic trouble throughout the country, or, by reason of faulty administration, especially in the field, we won't venture to say. But since circuit methods, as used up to this time, seem to be inadequate in running all those theatres profitably, we could make the suggestion that they change their entire set-up so as to leave the manager entirely alone and free to operate his theatre as he sees fit.

In other words; cut the leashes and break down those walls and let that house manager go after business without hampering or handicapping him in any way. No matter how deep his house may be in the red right now he will probably be willing to stake his job on being able to get into the black if left alone.

Surely the experiment (if you want to call it such) is well worth trying. After all these years of circuit tactics along other lines which are not proving satisfactory, we cannot see where the circuits can lose anything by reverting to the old days when managers operated their theatres as they saw fit and in accordance with existing local conditions.

It is going to happen anyway. Aside from home office and executive interference, you need only talk to the majority of circuit managers to find that they are almost totally lacking in enthusiasm to their organizations by reason of constant changing of their superiors, added reports and extra work to comply with home office orders.

They are restricted in their show-selling to such an extent that they cannot make use of their talents to create interest in either the attractions they play or the theatres they are running. Their home-office and superiors seem to think that they can always sell the local merchants the idea that they uoght to pay money to advertise the theatre's pictures. They will not recognize the fact that the theatre too must spend a little to make a little. Even the old Scotch exhibitor was sport enough to spend a dollar if he could see a chance of making a dollar. So apparently the circuit chiefs have trumped the Scotchman.

We can see only success in reverting to the "let-the-manager-run-the-theatre" days. Put him entirely on his own responsibility and he will gladly agree to gamble his job on being able to make his house a profitable proposition. Give him full sway to do as he pleases. Show him in black and white the exact operating cost of the theatre and let him have a five or ten percent on all receipts above that sum.

You have proven that present methods are all wrong, now let the local manager prove that he can or cannot make money for you. If he falls down he will have no one to blame but himself. If he makes good, all concerned will benefit financially. Does all this sound logical? "CHICK."

ATMOSPHERIC FRONT HELPED H. HOFF SELL A DIETRICH PICTURE

An exceptionally attractive front with a lot of Chinese atmospheric fixings helped greatly to sell "Shanghai Express" for H. P. Hoff, manager of the Bardavon Theatre, Poughkeepsie, N. Y.

A week in advance, Hoff decorated the inner and outer lobbies to suggest Chinese atmosphere; the decorations consisting of several Oriental silk panels which were borrowed from a local department store.

Black silk hangers with gold Chinese letters hung on the pillars of the lobby. These were also borrowed from the store. On other pillars were hangers made up of heavy red paper on which were painted the stars' names and titles in Chinese characters. From the ceiling of the lobby were hung Chinese lanterns and red crepe paper streamers. The lighting in the lobby was changed to yellow lights in place of the usual white.

A large wooden banner was hung under the marquee over box office with title cut-out and cut-outs of Dietrich and Brook directly over the box office—during run of picture. The title cut-out was in Chinese characters.

Two days in advance a walking ballyhoo was on the streets—consisting of a man made up to resemble a Chinaman. Over his shoulder he carried a bamboo pole with a double face sign on each end of it. One side read: "Travel with Marlene Dietrich and Clive Brook"—other side read: "Aboard the Shanghai Express at the Bardavon Theatre starting Saturday."

Hoff states that this stunt caused plenty of comment and so we're obliged to him for passing it along. We'll be looking forward to further news from Poughkeepsie.

F. NAIFY PROMOTED A CO-OPERATIVE AD AMONG LOCAL TRADE

We thought that the picture "Palmy Days" had about run its course in all sections of the country by this time but note that it was played only a short time ago by Fred Naify, manager of the Senator Theatre, Chico, Calif.

Naify promoted a very good cooperative ad among local merchants on the strength of the "Palmy Days" angle, according to a tear sheet we have at hand, and his ad received a good break right in the center.

BOSCO ON PARADE!

WORLEY PLAYED UP A MYSTERY ANGLE WHEN SELLING GARBO FILM

A tie-up with a local newspaper proved the means of boosting trade on "Mata Hari" when that picture was played by L. C. Worley, manager of the Palace Theatre, Peoria, Ill. The topic was "Should a Star Be A Mystery?" and it ran for four days in advance of playdate.

For one week before opening, a radio station broadcasted daily in conjunction with "Tatler" program announcements of the showings. A large department store also featured a full window display on new straw hats made up especially from style stills of those worn by Miss Garbo. A cafeteria also aided by having cards printed with ad of picture on the reverse side. The card featured one of the many free ticket gags.

All the deal cost with the newspaper was a matter of fifty guest tickets and the returns more than justified Worley's move in that direction. His other tie-ups also contributed their share of a gratifying gross on the attraction.

Marines Aided Dawson

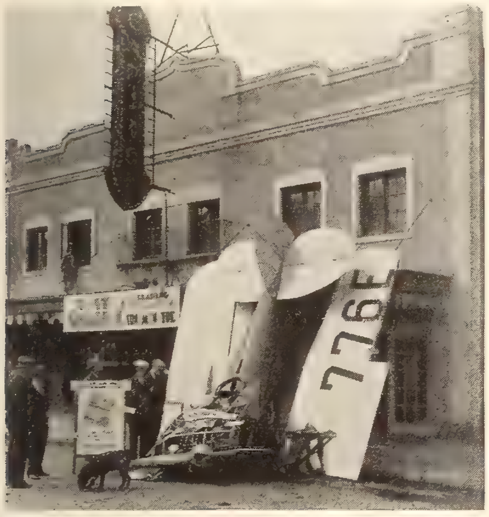
A tie-up with the local Marine Corps as well as the Naval Division furnished some corking publicity on "Hell Divers" for Roger Dawson, manager of the Palace Theatre, Milwaukee, Wis.

The Marines paraded to the theatre on night of opening and the Nav's squad of 150 men repeated the stunt a few nights later. A special screening was run for the officers of both outfits and in appreciation of the occasion the officers loaned the theatre flags, machine guns and other material for use in the lobby.

CRACKED-UP 'PLANE ATTRACTED ATTENTION TO ANDERSON'S SHOW

A cracked-up 'plane placed so as to represent a smash-up in front of his theatre proved the means of attracting much attention to "Lost Squadron" when that picture was played by John W. Anderson, advertising manager of Bend Theatres, Bend, Ore.

A recent crack-up at a local aviation field, of which the whole town knew about, provided the necessary 'plane and it was secured through cooperation from the Aviation Club. This stunt, plus the fact that the picture was played hot with the larger cities, resulted in excellent business.



Anderson and his associates are on the job when it comes to obtaining publicity and other examples of the work these boys are doing will be presented from time to time. The smashed 'plane certainly made a realistic tie-up for "Lost Squadron."

GEORGE MEYERS PUT OVER COSTLESS GAG THAT MADE BIG HIT

Showmen who are interested in costless advertising (and who isn't these days) might like to try out a stunt recently put over in connection with a Kiddie Club matinee by George B. Meyers, advertising manager of the Princess Theatre, Mayfield, Ky.

He promoted 500 bags of cakes from a local bakery concern at no cost other than the overprinting of the paper bags. Several days in advance post cards were mailed out to each member of the Kiddie Club, announcing that in addition to presenting each kid with a bag of cakes, there would be a Big Pie Eating Contest on the stage and a large five pound cake for the winner. It was also stated that many other games would be played. Mention was given the bakery in all ads and printed matter.

Meyers received 80 per cent response from his work described above and the baker was well satisfied with his end of the deal. Incidentally, the bags of cakes were passed out as the kids left the theatre. George is doing nicely with his Kiddie Club, we hear, and understand that he's using some of his old vaude magician tricks as another means of stimulating interest. He shows the tricks and then tells the kids to return next week and have them explained. Here's hoping that he has a large number of them up his sleeve.

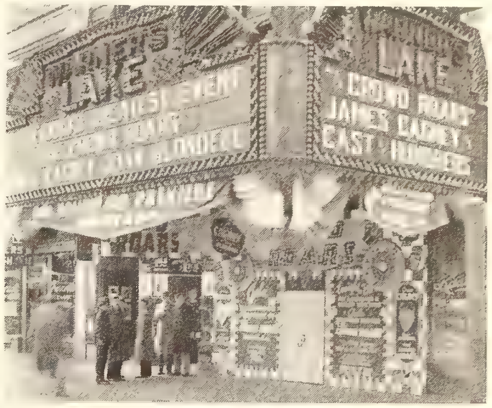
HOLLYWOOD PREMIERE HELD BY DANNENBERG AND CLEVELAND CREW

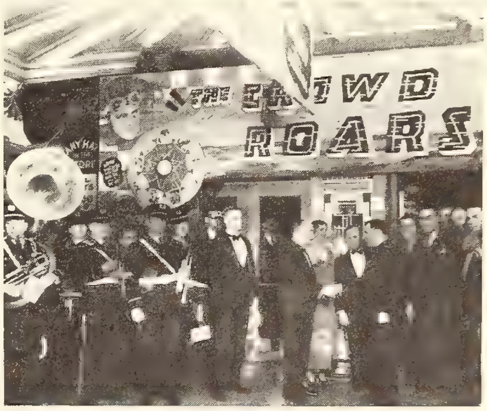
It took no less than a Hollywood opening, all the way from soup to nuts, to satisfy Sid Dannenberg, Warner exploitation chief in Cleveland, Ohio, that the right sort of treatment was being accorded "The Crowd Roars" when that picture hit the city.

Running true to form, the house was kept dark throughout opening day, and evening saw the enevitable sun arcs, banners, speeches, band, celebrities appearing in evening dress, and a recording of the event by a sound news truck. One of the accompanying photos shows the doors closed and the front and marquee gaily decorated.

Another stunt that attracted wide attention in the city was the driving of a racing car, mounted on a truck, through streets one week prior to opening.



The other photo shows the band gathered on sidewalk in front of theatre on opening night, looking on while Nat Wolfe, zone manager of Warner theatres, shakes hands with Milt Jones, a local racing driver who took part in the ceremonies. Sid Dannenberg is standing between the two men.



While not mentioned, we can see by the photo that there are two imitation tire-mounted auto wheels at either side of the entrance to the lobby, both decorated with several stills from the picture. Altogether, the art work appears most attractive and we judge that "Hank" Harold had a hand in that. The Warner staff out in Cleveland are all on their toes these days and we're glad to hear that they are getting such fine results.

Sindlinger Promoted

Al Sindlinger, well known as a Warner Bros. showman down in Pennsylvania, has been made manager of all Warner houses at Reading, Pa.

TENT EFFECT UNDER MARQUEE HELPED ED HART SELL PICTURE

Striped awning and pennants carried out the circus tent idea on "Polly of the Circus" for Ed Hart, while he was in charge of the Troy Theatre, Troy, N. Y. The entire underneath portion of the marquee had the appearance of the interior of a tent, with just enough of the material hanging from the three sides of the marquee. The box office was also covered with the same material. Two dozen stills of Miss Davies and Clark Gable, particularly circus shots, also helped carry off the scheme.

The above picture was one of the last Hart played before leaving the Troy and he tells us he had three profitable days. Just as soon as we get a further line on the activities of this seasoned showman we'll pass along some more of his ideas.

SIMMS USED LOCAL NEWSPAPER TO PUT OVER POPULAR GAG

An advantageous tie-up was made with a local newspaper when Morris Simms, manager of the Olympia Theatre, New Bedford, Mass., played "Polly of the Circus."

Guest tickets were offered to those who sent in the names of ten pictures that Clark Gable had appeared in, the titles being listed in the classified columns at the rate of five per day. The newspaper contributed two large ads in connection with the gag, as well as devoting a generous portion of the space to title of picture, name of theatre, cast and playdates.

Returns on the tie-up were so gratifying that the newspaper took a photo of Simms, his assistant and the head of the classified department, all looking over the vast amount of mail received. Along with the story, the photo appeared in the following Sunday edition of the paper. Guest tickets were the only cost attached to the deal.

CONTRACT BRIDGE LATEST INNOVATION AT THE BOSTON MET

Contract bridge is the latest innovation to be added to the list of diversions for patrons of the Metropolitan Theatre, Boston, Mass., by those two enterprising showmen, Managing Director Henry Taylor and Publicity Director Floyd Bell.

The Met has been steadily growing into a city institution under the direction of these two, so much so that the Boston Post refers to a portion of the house as the "Cinema Clubroom." We'll let the paper tell you about what's going on there in its own words. Incidentally, the following appeared in two-column measure on the amusement page. A two-column photo showing bridge players grouped around a table also broke in another issue.

A Swell Story!

"When a combination is formed consisting of a former 'legitimate' show manager and a circus press agent, something rather unusual in the line of entertainment and 'Ballyhoo' is almost certain to result.

"That is just what has happened at the Metropolitan Theatre in Boston. Henry Taylor, managing director of the theatre, for many years with the Messrs. Shubert and other so-called legitimate theatre organizations, and Floyd Bell, for several years press director of Ringling Brothers and Barnum & Bailey, have converted the Grand Lounge of the popular 'Met' into what is truly a 'downtown club.'

"Eyes of old showmen bulge with wonder when they are taken on a trip through the Metropolitan, and new patrons are awed by the various phases of entertainment provided.

"Naturally, the theatre shows pictures, and has weekly stage shows with many added attractions, but it is in the Grand Lounge that the greatest departure from old-time show business is to be found.

Take a Bow, Boys!

"When this pair of veteran exploiters of shows came to the Metropolitan, nearly two years ago, the Grand Lounge was just another huge room, such as one finds in motion picture palaces of the present day. Architecturally perfect, it was rather bare and void of entertainment value. Now it provides what no other theatre in the world does provide—continuous entertainment throughout the day and evening for those patrons who must wait for seats, or who, having seen the picture and stage show, wish to while away a few hours of pleasant enjoyment in surroundings which equal those of any club in the city.

"First of all, dancing was installed in the Grand Lounge, and this was a tremendous success from the outset. Sid Reinherz, popular radio personality, was signed with his Metropolitan Collegians to furnish music to which patrons of the 'Met' might dance nightly. And now six nights a week—dancing is barred in Boston on Sundays—the Lounge is packed to capacity with a smiling, happy crowd. Every now and then, special attractions are provided for the dancing nights.

"Afternoons there are bridge, ping-pong and Camelot in the Grand Lounge. Tea is served from 2 until 5 each afternoon.

"Contract bridge is played at a dozen tables each afternoon, and just now an extremely interesting contract contest, on the Culbertson-Lenz order, is being staged in the Grand Lounge each Friday afternoon at 3 o'clock between James F. Magner, Jr., Boston's youthful bridge master, and Walter Gatcomb, another local expert.

"A children's playroom has been equipped with all sorts of toys, and here the mothers may leave their offspring, in the knowledge that they will be well cared for while they enjoy the talkie and stage show.

"Dancing classes for children are conducted twice each week, and this, too, is just another 'Met' service, without charge to the patrons.

"There is a fashion show each Monday afternoon, and in the Ladies' Lounge a complete beauty parlor has been installed, and here madame or mademoiselle may have a 'facial,' or have her hair arranged in the latest coiffure, without charge, of course."

You've often read accounts in this department of the doings of Floyd Bell and the above will convey a good idea of what recipe was used to make this theatre one of the most popular rendezvous in the city. But, like the well known grapenuts—"There's a reason"—and the reason is Bell and his able staff of assistants.

WARM WEATHER SUGGESTIONS!

EQUIPMENT IN SHAPE

As a preliminary step in your plans for summer trade, let us hark back on a subject we have been calling your attention to for the last five or six weeks; namely, the ventilating or cooling plant of your theatre.

Give it a thorough inspection. Make certain that it is working perfectly and that all parts are in good shape. If any attention whatsoever is needed don't wait too long. Delays are dangerous. If you are part of a chain organization, it is your duty to immediately notify the proper parties that repairs or replacements are necessary. Do so at once. If it is entirely up to yourself, get busy now.

CLEAN UP THE HOUSE

Clean up the house from front to back and from top to bottom. This is another angle we have been "preaching" along with cooling plant repairs. Try one of those good, old-fashioned spring cleaning ideas. Put every one of your staff onto the job and make it so thorough that not a single detail will be overlooked. Get on to a ladder and go after those ledges above the doors, the coves where dust and dirt accumulate in quantities, try making those drapes and valances look a bit more inviting instead of antique.

Mop up the cement floors which are without carpet or other covering. Maybe such surfaces are sadly in need of a coat of cement paint. Organize the job so that it will really mean a "clean-up" when you tackle it.

Get your lighting changed around a bit; inject a cool appearance into those side bracket lights, into your dome or cove lighting. Keep away from reds or other warm colors. Change your lobby frame mats and backgrounds to lighter and more spring-like shades, such as greys, blues, straw or green.

A FLORIST TIE-UP

Plants, such as ferns, various kinds of greens, flowers, hanging baskets, foliage of all sorts. This lends a distinctly spring appearance to any theatre or foyer. But see that you keep such trimmings in good shape all the time. If not you will spoil the effect by letting it take on a seedy look. Try your salesmanship on the largest florist in town; see if you can't sell him on the idea of keeping your foyers and lounge rooms supplied with flowers and greens. A neat credit card or program mention is well worth such a tie-up.

SPEAKING OF SUMMER RESORT

. . . have you attended the FOX ORPHEUM lately. Summer resort weather . . . and no sand in your hair. Mountain coolness . . . and no stone bruises. A picnic . . . without the ants. A cool, comforting vacation . . . that doesn't leave you broke. Our mammoth cooling plant makes the ORPHEUM, Kansas City's favorite summer resort.

THROUGH YOUR ADS

See that your newspaper ads convey the cool "thought" such as borders of various types all designed for this purpose. The same applies to your lobby signs and frames. A hanging frame under your marquee will also help emphasize this thought. Create many catch lines which will lend themselves to your consistent campaign to sell the comfort and coolness of your theatre. Use them sensibly. Incorporate them into your ads, on to your various displays and signs.

While remaining decidedly optimistic, so far as the future is concerned, every showman must make up his mind that unusual effort will be required to keep his theatre operating, if not profitably, at least without a steady loss throughout the warm months.

Suggestions for summer business stimulation will probably be forthcoming from all directions, but for those who have learned to depend upon seasonal material from the Round Table Club we have accumulated a vast amount of material and ideas which ought to prove real helpful to those who are willing to put their shoulders to the wheel and fight to the last ditch for business this summer.

It may prove the nearest thing to suicide to permit your theatre to fall into anything resembling a slump this summer. No matter how simple it has been up to this time to keep business somewhere near normal you must make up your mind that with the coming of the real "hot dog days" your patronage will automatically fall off. It is a natural reaction and even affects those men whose theatres are all alone in a community.

The material incorporated into this year's article is a combination of suggestions made during the past two years and includes portions of E. S. C. Coppack's Summer Article from last year's Herald.

If any member or reader has tear sheets or other data containing useful information, stunts, ideas or campaigns on Summer Business Building, we urge them to send it in at once for use in subsequent issues. We are anxious to augment this group of summer suggestions with many more equally as practical and feel certain that hundreds of showmen can furnish us with the necessary dope.

Reprints of this entire article can be had upon request from accredited Club members. Drop us a line and it will be forwarded at once. You can then place these reprint sheets, (which are the same size as the Club pages), in your folder along with other reprints of important articles and stories which have been made available from time to time during the past year or two.

The reprints are on heavy stock to enable you to reproduce any of the illustrations via cuts. This will make it possible for you to send the page or the clipped illustration to your local engraver for whatever sized cut you require. They can be incorporated into your newspaper advertising or used for programs, throw-aways, etc.

Take advantage of this HERALD-ROUND TABLE CLUB service and make it useful for your theatre at all times. Others are following these suggestions regularly, and profitably.

TRAILERS ARE IMPORTANT

In those pre-hot days, especially at this time in most parts of the country where real summer has not arrived as yet, you should capitalize on your screen through the use of well-worded trailers. Get that "cool and comfortable" thought right under their skins so that with the coming of the hot days they will have your theatre in mind.

Possibly a series of trailers, changed weekly, will prove less monotonous than the same one for several weeks. The cost is really trivial compared to the amount of good it can do for you. If your imagination just won't function for text that carries a punch, communicate with one of the trailer companies; they'll be tickled pink to help you out with many worth-while suggestions. Let them work out a campaign of this sort. And besides, they are equipped to make up all sorts of trailers with a cool background or border. There is no medium more powerful than your screen, so use it to good advantage.

BUSINESS STIMULATORS

Then we should all be thinking about some of those old, but nevertheless worthy stunts to stimulate business during the summer. A series of bathing beauty contests in which a cup can be offered for the various classes, such as most beautiful girl, best form, most original suit, etc., etc. These gags may be frowned upon by some of the larger circuits, but they have brought business in the past and we'll venture the guess that they will bring plenty of business in the future to those houses being run by managers who know their onions.

Tie-up with swimming pools, soda fountains, drug stores, candy shops, restaurants, etc. See if you can promote a tie-up for the serving of iced tea or other cool drinks free to your patrons. Perhaps the cost is much less than you think even if you must pay the freight yourself. The cost will never amount to a heck of a lot if it is instrumental in making a crowd of patrons feel kindly towards you and your theatre.

Another worth-while tie-up is that with a local ice cream concern for the free distribution of ice cream bricks. This has been worked to good returns in the past and is an ideal summer gag. Get in touch with your local company and see if you can work it out. It's worth a try, anyway.

THE PUBLICITY ANGLE

Publicity is a valuable medium in the selling of a cool theatre to the public and in this connection we cannot stress too strongly the importance of a well-planned campaign. You should know enough about the cooling or ventilating equipment in your theatre to be able to make up some fine newspaper readers. Tell them, through such stories, how often the air is changed; how much lower the temperature is; how much more comfortable it is inside the theatre as compared with the sidewalk temperature.

But don't exaggerate. You have had this warning in connection with most of your regular merchandising activities. Well, it's just as important in connection with your cooling plant propaganda. You may succeed in fooling them once but that will be all.

WARM WEATHER SUGGESTIONS!

CAKES OF REAL ICE

Still another good gag is the cake of ice stunt, whereby you place a 200-pound cake of ice in your lobby with appropriate card to read along the lines that this cake would melt in the street in three hours, while in the theatre it would last for three days. The very sight of the cake of ice suggests coolness, and since the power of suggestion is an important angle in the selling of coolness in your theatre, then this idea is a good one.

Is it possible to erect a fountain in the center of your lobby or foyer? If so, it will make a peach of an entrance fixed up in a good showmanlike way. Picture one of those fountains, shooting a thin spray into the air, banked with cool greens and ferns and carefully lit by baby spots. If that don't cool the brow of the most heated patron then you had better try a cake of ice under each and every seat.

Avoid the word "hot" in connection with any of your copy for summer. Do not use the word at all, for just as the cake of ice suggests coolness, so will the word "hot" suggest heat.

PLAY FOR THE KIDDIES

Encourage displays from individuals. Every town has its quota of flower fans. People (mostly the women-folk) who spend hours in their gardens petting and fussing over their favorite rose bush, etc. Get to them somehow or other and make them display their flowers. Offer special blue ribbons for numerous classes, ranging from the experienced amateur flower grower to the kiddies. Yet, they, too, are great flower fans—in fact, you will find one of your best slants on the entire show through the youngsters, providing they are encouraged to take part, either individually or through the local school where the study and love of growing plants and flowers have always been stressed.

If space permits, set aside a special portion of the exhibits of the children and award appropriate honors to further encourage their interest in such things.

INSTITUTIONAL ADVERTISING

The four ad cuts reproduced with this story were used last year to sell cooling plants in many of the Fox West Coast theatres. Fashion some along the same lines in connection with your own "cool" institutional copy and see if it don't attract attention. And while on the subject of institutional advertising don't overlook the use of such material at the time of the year when you can sell more than "just another picture." Cut down, if necessary, on your regular ad allowance so as to leave you at least one two-column by five or six inches once a week for an institutional ad about the comfort and coolness of your theatre. Make no attempt to tie it in with any pictures, just devote that much space OFF THE THEATRE PAGE for the sole purpose of selling the theatre's comfort.

Theatres possessing air-washing equipment might find it worth while to investigate the use of ice cakes in the washer so that it will cool, not only the air, but the water as well. This has been done successfully in several theatres on the Coast and in the West. Consult the people who installed your equipment and ask their advice or suggestions.

COOLING PAPER

The first thought of most of us is to tell the people that the theatre is really comfortable during the summer months. Our usual medium for this is cooling paper, either sniped or on regular stands. However, there is one little angle that has proven very successful in plugging the late show. Filling stations will usually give space to a hanging card with this copy: "After your drive, enjoy a complete performance at the cool (Blank) Theatre. Come as late as 9:15."

A POST CARD NOVELTY

In thousands of residential communities a regular mailing list can be made to do a good turn by bringing the people a simple message on your cooling plant or the comforts of your theatre, prepared in a manner different from your usual layout. Many of the lithograph companies now include in their service cut-out paper hangers about 30 inches long made to resemble icicles. For an outlay of three or four dollars and the trouble of tacking these cards to strips of wood, the marquee bursts forth with a new valance idea that adds novelty to the appearance of the front and helps a lot toward giving a cool impression.

DANCING IN THE LOBBY

Since the last show on hot summer nights usually has a pretty good attendance, another little stunt that has met with favor is to get a radio dealer to lend one of his instruments to be placed in the lobby and as soon as the last show breaks, have an usher select a hot dance program. Push the easels against the wall, let the cooling plant run an extra 30 minutes and those of the patrons who wish may have the pleasure of dancing to good music on a good floor. It is surprising how many patrons stay for these lobby dances. While they are dancing, the theatre cooling plant keeps them comfortable.

ORGANIZATION NIGHTS

The smaller the community the more active are local organizations and lodges. You can bolster business on off nights by putting on the stage a guest artist from the Masons, Elks, Rotary, etc. Of course, through pride the members of the organization attend in a body, buying regular admission tickets and feel proud of the fact that the theatre is publicizing them. All in all, it is one of those stunts that costs nothing, but usually makes the ticket machine sing a song.

MIDNIGHT MATINEE

In communities where people are out fairly late on summer nights at swimming pools and so forth, a midnight matinee or "owl" show is usually successful. It is good policy to run the picture that opens the following day, thus making a preview, but giving the folks an organ song fest or a song cartoon, a comedy and a picture, for a flat admission price and it seems to get good results. As an added novelty, of course, there is the dancing in the lobby after the show.

We've had several opportunities of talking over some of these summer tips with visiting and local showmen. It may sound surprising, but too many managers like to jump at hasty conclusions without giving proper thought or consideration to the subject under discussion.

DON'T assume that any particular stunt or gag is unfitted for your house. Perhaps the way it is described may not just work out for you, but you must always figure on revamping and remoulding any idea you want to use so that it is in keeping with the type of house you are running and the class of patronage you draw from.

We claim that nine out of every ten suggestions on these five pages can be worked out so as to fit YOUR theatre. The basic idea is all you should require to start work on. From that point is is expected that you will work out the details, and even elaborate considerably on the original thought, so that when finished it may be a much bigger stunt than the first idea suggested.

To attempt to cover every single angle or gag for warm weather business building would involve more than the entire Club section of several issues. And, you probably have twice as many good ideas yourself to add to these really few suggestions. But forget about whether they are complete or incomplete, do some thinking for yourself and by putting two and two together you may be able to lay out a plan to cover the entire summer.

In other words: starting with Decoration Day week-end you can work out a campaign which should shift from one idea to another and covering a period of between twelve and fifteen weeks. This can be made possible by working it out so that one graduates into another and in some cases ties right in with the preceding stunt.

Chart the whole plan on a large folder and see that every little detail ties together. For example; if you work a popularity contest, have it graduate into the prizes for the Vacation or Cruise trips. The same thought should prevail on even your publicity campaign. The mailing list and personal contact portions of your drive for summer business ought to graduate into a strong newspaper campaign so that everything tends to bring home your argument for summer patronage. Keep stressing that "Cool," "COOL" idea as the thought behind every part of your campaigns. Remember that your attractions alone during hot weather may not be sufficient to bring them to the theatre. Extra effort must be concentrated on the cool and comfort of your house.

We maintain that theatres can stay out of the red over the twelve week period of usual summer weather. But hard, consistent, sensible effort must be utilized to achieve such an accomplishment. It CAN be done. Go ahead and do it.

WARM WEATHER SUGGESTIONS!

FLOWER SHOW IDEA

Aside from the usual florist tie-up for the furnishing of greens, etc., an excellent spring or summer stunt would be a Flower Show held at the theatre. In discussing a show of this kind we must impress upon you the importance of making it an outstanding event from every angle.

Naturally, one of the first requisites for such a show is that the theatre have some place to display the flowers. A large lobby, a good sized foyer, the mezanine or promenade, are all suggested spots.

In arranging such a tie-up, try to go a little further than just the one or two local florists; through them, get to the growers who furnish them with the plants and cut flowers. There must be some greenhouses not too far away from your town or city.

Surround the whole affair with the dignity it deserves and work in every angle that lends itself to such a show. This refers to decorations, stands to hold the flowers and displays, lighting effects, cooling devices, etc., etc. You should have little difficulty in promoting a special section in your newspaper because there are sufficient novel slants to this idea to warrant such a special section. The Flower Show itself, the appeal to those folks who find great delight in making their front lawns or back yards little or big flower gardens, the class of people who, for lack of any other place, get a kick out of flower boxes on their windows and porches.

Then, most every community harbors one or more organiations coming under the title of Horticulturists. Get them, not only interested, but right behind the idea so that they will work with you. Line up the stores who are selling garden hardware, lawn seeds, landscape nursery-men, and all those others we cannot think of at the moment. They are all worth-while tie-ups and will help make your Flower Show a huge success.

SELECTING THE JUDGES

The judges should, of course, consist of those who are authorities on the matter of flowers and plants. If you have one of those Horticultural Societies, they can furnish the best judges. If not, get them from out of town if necessary, but make sure they know their business. Don't step on Mrs. Jones' pride by ignoring her "priceless geraniums." The sensible use of "honorary mention" ribbons will cover a multitude of sins. And how much better it makes those hard working contributors feel.

We could go on for a half a dozen pages extolling the virtues of the Flower Show angle as applied to theatres, but we feel that the suggestion, plus the few ideas injected for your guidance should be quite sufficient.

In concluding the subject of the Flower Show we need only say that if properly handled an event of this kind can become one of the outstanding activities in the entire community. The theatre can capitalize tremendously, but use good judgment and make your plans so fool-proof that there will be little or no room for hard feelings anywhere along the line. And, especially since this is an article on summer business, don't forget to stress the cool angle of your theatre by employing any and every slant that will make the space devoted to the Flower Show as cool and comfortable as is possible.

And, incidentally, if we haven't stressed the slant sufficiently, do not lose sight of the tremendous interest you focus upon your theatre by reason of this sort of a show. It is needless to repeat too often that your house will become a household topic for conversation during, and for long after, you put an idea like this across.

Speaking of
SUMMER RESORTS

ARE YOU PREPARING A "KEEP COOL CAMPAIGN"?

Al Zimbalest of W. B. New Jersey Theatres published this in "Howdy" their division house organ.

May and June months are the time of the year when theatre business managers get the hives trying to get around the "summer month slump." The idea that summer is the time for "bad business" is only true when we help make it so!

Old Sol, with his heat waves and the summer attractions which he brings, is not to be taken lightly. He has punched many a box office into more holes than can be found in a commutation ticket. But in many instances we have helped him decrease our summer business. When the heat hits us, it hits everyone, and people will be so anxious to get away from the boiling rays that they will flock to your theatre—IF YOUR THEATRE IS COMFORTABLY COOL.

A COUPLE OF DON'TS LIFTED!

Don't sell the idea of "Coolness and Comfort" alone—remember your screen and stage and merchandising attractions!

Don't forget your publicity plugs in the newspapers, programs, etc.

Don't get tired of telling your patrons of the "Cool Comfort" of your house.

Don't take it for granted that your town knows your theatre is cool. Keep telling it to 'em.

Don't let performers—if you have vaudeville—mop their brows or refer in any way to the heat.

Don't let musicians play "heavy" overtures or music that rises in a thunderous crescendo. People become restless.

Don't use copy that is "hot" in ads, trailers, lobby, etc. Heat is your greatest summer competitor.

Don't forget to watch your seat covers. Are they spick and span?

Don't forget to watch your drapes! Are they covered with cooling effects?

Don't use "hot" colors on your stage cards if you play acts!

Don't forget that green is the "coolest" of all colors and one of the most decorative for effects.

Don't forget a laughing audience forgets heat! How much attention are you paying to features and short subjects?

Don't forget people perspire when you give them long announcements. Brevity is the soul of coolness—in all copy—whether in newspaper ads, trailers or lobby. THE LESS SAID ABOUT HEAT—THE BETTER!

REFRIGERATOR GIVE-AWAYS

Nearly everybody that sells refrigerators or radios knows that there is no place like a theatre lobby for getting mailing lists and to concentrate the attention of thousands of people in a short time. Electrical refrigerators are receiving a lot of advertising during the summer months and it is fairly easy to secure one to be given away free in your lobby to some lucky patron. Who would not buy a 50-cent ticket if he had a chance of taking home a $200 refrigerator?

CRUISE CONTESTS

Listing stunts such as these to sock that old summer slump could go on forever. These suggestions are merely to refresh your memory and possibly give you an idea that has proven successful for some other fellow.

A new stunt that some of the boys are using this summer is the awarding of one of those four or five-day cruises being featured by the steamship companies. They are a great idea. A beautiful big liner wanders out into the ocean, fools around for a few days and then comes back. The passenger has all the fun of a sea voyage with none of the expense of paying guides in foreign countries. As these cruises in themselves are merely promotional stunts by the steamship companies they should be glad to put their material before your patrons in return for a cruise or two given away by the theatre. Of course, the awarding of such a cruise suggests a lot of other angles such as popularity contests, etc.

After all, the only answer to socking that summer slump is a little bit of ingenuity and a lot of hard work. It can be done!

We might also add at this time that an entire campaign on putting over one of these steamship cruises will appear in next week's issue.

BREEZES

BOY SCOUTS

One of the best institutional advertising stunts is to assist some Boy Scout in attending a camp for two or three weeks during the summer with any simple contest; a popularity vote, collecting the largest number of stubs, best record distributing heralds, most proficient in scouting activities, etc. A thing of this kind is always good for space in the papers and usually gives you an opportunity to secure an interesting lobby exhibit of scoutcraft. The expense of sending a boy to camp would probably be about $15 as against the hundreds of dollars in tickets sold to parents of scouts endeavoring to secure a prize.

SHOW THEM HOW

We recall, from last year, how a smart showman, Richard B. Tucker by name, of Richmond, Va., worked out a most unusual campaign dealing with the refrigeration apparatus in the theatre under his direction, whereby several half-page ads were used showing pictures and describing in detail the way the machinery worked. Those who file their copies of the publication each week will find it on page 74 of the issue of May 17, 1930 (Motion Picture News). It was a smart angle and can be used to just as good advantage by showmen with less pretentious equipment in their houses.

Stuff of this kind directs attention to the angle we are always striving to get across, namely that the theatre is cool, and if you can emphasize this thought by letting the patrons know how you keep it cool then it helps get your point across. See if you can work out something along similar lines. Your ventilating company will gladly send you drawings, etc., if you ask for them.

START IT RIGHT NOW

There is so much to be said about this subject of building business during the hot weather, plus the selling of your theatre as being the most comfortable and coolest place in town, that it would probably take up more pages than the entire issue uses. But we are only trying to "sell YOU an idea" and from that point you must shift for yourself. Reading about the successful warm weather campaigns during the summer on these Club pages will not help you if your house is in a typical hot weather slump due to your letting the business and house fall into a rut. During the summer it will be too late to help yourself. NOW is the time to get set. If business is good this summer you will be able to enjoy it yourself. A swim down at the beach or in the pool, or those little side trips, and maybe (here's hoping) during that vacation with the family. All the way down the line you will be a happier manager if you know that you gave your house a good send-off and sold the patrons on its coolness.

THEATRE PERSONALITIES

Most of us overlook the fact that the fellow who is writing advertising for other business houses gets as stuck for ideas as we do. If approached in the right way, he will probably be glad of a little help in the way of a suggestion. Here are a few: A cut of a theatre personality—organist, master of ceremonies, etc.—enjoying a fountain drink. Such a cut can hardly be overlooked by anybody with the fountain's streamer.

PARKING

Statistics show that almost every American family operates at least one automobile. Any business for the theatre is probably remote from your locality and necessitates the people coming by auto or bus, usually in the old family chariot. You will find they are more apt to return if the theatre gives consideration to their parking problems. In some crowded areas it is impossible to secure a lot for free parking, but even in busy downtown districts parking garage owners and lot owners are almost invariably interested in a plan that will publicize their service and, in return for mention in your herald, will probably cut the parking rates in half for your patrons. If the garage or lot happens to be within a couple of blocks of your theatre, this is too good a bet for the manager to pass up.

BEACH IDEAS

Even in inland towns where there are no beaches, the owners of amusement parks might be interested in giving you space on a diving float bearing large copy about your theatre in return for your standing part of the expense of erection. On the boardwalk or in the midway concessionaires are always in need of prizes. Why not let them award a guest ticket or two in return for a large card on your attractions prominently displayed?

And, by the way, how about putting stickers on your cooling plant on the bath house mirrors or inside the lockers? A pass or two to the superintendent will probably square this stunt.

REFRESHMENTS

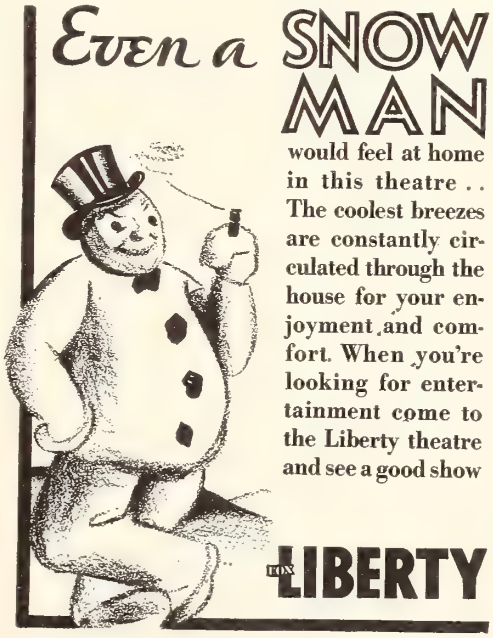
And since we are talking about bottling works, why not use them for the regular matinees? Your local grocer or tea company might be interested in serving iced tea. Possibly the ice cream company would serve these new confections that are put up in paper cups. They are usually another one of those bits of exploitation where everybody wins.



Even a SNOW MAN would feel at home in this theatre . . The coolest breezes are constantly circulated through the house for your enjoyment and comfort. When you're looking for entertainment come to the Liberty theatre and see a good show

ANOTHER MAILING LIST IDEA

Dick Moss of Los Angeles says: When the thermometer starts in mounting, the theatre refrigeration system starts working. And, if a theatre is fortunate enough to have a refrigeration system, no stone should be left unturned in letting the public know about it. At the beginning of the summer season, I think it would be wise for a theatre to augment the newspaper, lobby and screen campaign, with a personal letter to the entire mailing list. The letter should be written in a personal style; it should explain the workings of the system; why the theatre is able to give cooler, cleaner and more refreshing air; and the comfort that the patron will enjoy by being a regular attendant of the theatre during the summer months. The cost of the equipment should be mentioned to impress and convince the patron that it is not an ordinary system. The right type of letter at the right time will go a long way in planting the thought of attending the theatre during the summer.

SWIMMING STUNT

This is a simple one that works easily. Photograph the theatre staff wearing bathing suits that are sold by some nearby merchant. He will be interested in using a cut of the photograph in display ads in the newspapers and the photograph itself in his window. The expense—nothing.

INSIDE THE THEATER TOO

Aside from your regular newspaper propaganda to implant the "cool" idea in the minds of your patrons, there are many other valuable angles worthy of your consideration. For example, you might make a tie-up with some local merchant and serve iced tea and coffee. Soda fountains will co-operate with a "Joan Crawford Special" or "Janet Gaynor Parfait." Local bottling works are good for a tie-up.

Try anything that will tie-up coolness with your theatre. A swimming stunt in the municipal pool or bathing pavilion. An ice-melting gag in the lobby or in front of the theatre. Small cut-outs frozen by your local ice plant into the center of a large cake of ice.

Florist tie-ups can also take in the furnishing of ferns and greens to be placed about the lobby and foyers. Cut flowers for the ladies' lounge rooms, etc. Possibly a beach-costume show in your main foyer through the aid of a local merchant selling such merchandise. Or, better still, if it can be worked, a bathing beauty parade on the stage along the lines of the fashion show idea.

Houses with expensive refrigerating apparatus must, naturally, work out their advertising campaigns along more definite lines in view of the fact that their theatres can be kept so cool and refreshing. Here you have the type of house that not only preaches "coolness," but is actually cool. They are in the best spot during the warm weather.

Neat icicle displays around the edge of the marquee, incorporated in the sign work and displays, or erected about the marquee. These and any similar ideas are always suitable for the majority of theatres and help get the idea over.

Various other warm weather suggestions have been carried in the Club section during the past month or so and those who follow the pages regularly are probably making use of some of the ideas published.

WARM WEATHER SUGGESTIONS!

PLUG THROUGH YOUR ADVERTISING!

From time to time throughout this article you have noted the references to newspaper advertising as part of the various campaigns to sell the "cool" idea throughout your community and thereby gain the confidence of the patron in your promise of a cool and comfortable atmosphere when they attend your shows during the warm weather.

In line with these references we would, at this time, call your particular attention to the little midget cuts and larger ad suggestions. These can be made up, as mentioned in the editorial box on the second page of this Summer Suggestion Section, by sending for a reprint of this entire article and clipping the illustration, or illustrations, you may want made into cuts, send them to your nearest engraver with size instructions, etc., and let him make them up into cuts for use in programs, newspaper ads, circulars, throwaways, etc.

Look over every cut and illustration to see whether you can gain an idea or two in your own plans for a summer campaign for business. They tie right in with the text and if you feel that one or more of these suggestions can be adapted to your house and town, then you have certainly wasted no time looking it over.

INSTITUTIONAL ADVERTISING IS GOOD!

The larger ad suggestions are good for both regular advertising combining your current attractions or can be worked out as special institutional advertising which is particularly desirable at this time of the year. Remember, you must sell more than just your show when the temperature starts taking a climb upwards. Your best bet is to impress on the minds of your patrons and the community in general that your theatre is cool. Then their subconscious mind will react favorably to the suggestion of one of the family that they take in a show at your house.

Use trailers along these lines, too. We've mentioned it several times before in this section, but we want to emphasize any angle that ties in with the general idea. You can revamp such suggestions and elaborate upon them until they are just what you want.

The temperature in this theatre is never over 70 degrees the best temperature for comfort and health

ICE CREAM THE KIDDIES!

Even if some local tie-up fails to produce a summer Santa Claus who will donate the bricks or cups of ice cream entirely free, it would still be good business to give such stuff away every matinee or on special matinees. The most it would cost you is a cent or two a cup and you've probably spent larger sums than that for some little unimportant toy or novelty during the season.

We've seen this particular gag worked quite successfully in many spots in and around New York City and it will in all probability be used again and over a wider area. Try your local ice cream manufacturers first and see if you can sell them on furnishing the cream in return for a program ad, a short trailer or a lobby card.

PLUG YOUR COOLING SYSTEMS!

This year more than ever before, every exhibitor should pay special attention to the selling of his cooling system to his patrons and to the public. . . . Almost every theatre now that has a cooling system, has paid for it. You have a lot of money tied up in your cooling system—you put it in because you felt that it would be a definite asset to your business—that it would enable you to not only keep open during the hot summer months, but primarily to enable you to retain your patronage. . . .

We are all creatures of habit, going to a theatre is only a habit and it is up to you to keep your patrons in the habit of going to your theatre during the hot summer months. . . . Selling your cooling system is of outstanding importance to you. . . . Start doing so right now—utilize every agency at your command—your screen—the newspapers—programs—lobby displays, etc. Your printer undoubtedly has special border designs that you can use on your program. Get out some attractive posters. . . . Utilize your screen. Start out with a trailer telling them about your cooling system. Don't be stingy. Have a different one every week from now on until the hot weather sets in. Then, when your cooling system is in operation, tell them about it—call their attention to it—send them out talking about it.

This word of mouth advertising is invaluable and the cost is trivial. . . . Don't just say that your theatre is the coolest spot in town. Make it look cool. Have a cool atmosphere throughout the entire place. Change your lights—take down your heavy drapes—put light uniforms on your ushers. Make your theatre look cool and inviting when a person enters it. . . . Don't forget the old saying that the first impression is often a lasting one. . . . Don't think that just because you have a cooling system that is all that is necessary.

Today more than ever before you have got to sell the public. The great outdoors is a powerful competitor. Boat lines—automobiles—baseball games—picnics—band concerts and what not, are all vying with you. . . . Use everything at your command to fight this opposition. If you do you have got a chance of succeeding. If you don't—you're licked!

A WIDE COVERAGE IS NECESSARY!

It must be kept in mind that prospective patrons located several miles from the theatre must be plugged even more than those who come to the theatre regularly and are thereby reached through the lobby ads, trailers and of course by the cool atmosphere of the theatre itself. Regular patrons, however, are not enough in most cases to keep your theatre operating profitably during the summer months. Added revenue is necessary and must be looked for from outside the town limits.

They should be reached through your regular newspaper advertising, which in most towns reach well into the surrounding communities, through direct mail plugs of various kinds and outdoor advertising if you are going in for any this summer.

Just don't forget that those folks in the outlying communities are not living in close or cramped quarters. They have plenty of fresh air and freedom from the heat after sundown. So you have to figure on pulling them in from the open country. Sell them along lines designed to pull this class. The attraction first, then the cool and comfortable ventilation of the theatre.

Circuits or small theatre groups desiring reprints of these five pages of Summer Business Suggestions can secure them by communicating with Club headquarters at 1790 Broadway, New York, and specifying the name and city of each theatre under their supervision.

By token of the same courtesy we are asking that similar organizations sending out special bulletins on this subject include us on their mailing list so that we can augment our manual with further ideas along these lines.

"Chick"

It's always cool in the Fox Astoria. The temperature is never over 70 degrees . . the best temperature for comfort and health. Make this theatre your headquarters for year-round entertainment.

An embarrassing moment for the doorman. Sorta tough to handle—this one—just take him for a little ride about that great mystery melodrama due on the next program and that the matter will be taken up with the home office. 'S'bout all you can do for one of these guys.

THREE SALES ANGLES PROVED AN EFFECTIVE AID TO C. T. PERRIN

Clubs, merchants and a special preview featured a campaign made on "Broken Lullaby" by C. T. Perrin, manager of the Sterling Theatre, Greeley, Colo.

A contest was started between all civic clubs and a separate contest for college sororities and fraternities—to attend in a body. The idea was for each member to pay his or her own admission, and have as nearly 100% attendance as possible. The club having the nearest perfect attendance was refunded the entire amount expended by their members, which amount should rightfully go to the club's treasury.

Letters were written to the merchants in advance of picture, telling them pictures of this type would undoubtedly bring a lot of people to town which in turn would be of benefit to merchants. Manager Perrin in his letter, sought permission from the merchants to insert a line in regard to the picture, in their regular ads, provided Perrin could make arrangements with the newspapers at no extra cost to the merchants. A sample of the copy used at the bottom of the merchants' ads, "Quality Recognizes Quality—That is why we recommend Paramount's Broken Lullaby—Coming Soon to Greeley."

Splendid comments came from all directions as a result of the preview to various local celebrities, etc. Almost every club in town had someone get up and tell about the picture; recommending it highly. One minister, among others, sent the manager a letter carrying this thought: Regardless of one's custom as an attendant of the movies during an ordinary picture, here is one our people cannot afford to miss—and continued with his personal opinion of picture.

All of which sounds like the makings of an effective campaign, and we're sure that other Club members will benefit through Perrin's suggestions.

Maxwell With Hamrick

Floyd Maxwell, manager of the Fox Theatre at Spokane, Wash., for the past three months, has resigned that post and gone with John Hamrick as manager of four houses in Portland, Ore. He will make his headquarters at the Oriental, newest and second largest theatre in the city, and also have supervision of the Music Box, Adler and Blue Mouse.

Maxwell, once drama editor of an Oregon newspaper, has been active in important theatre posts in the Northwest for some time, acting as managing director for Fox theatre interests in Portland.

CALDWELL STAGED A BIG CELEBRATION IN HONOR OF NEW HOUSE

A two-cornered campaign was recently supervised by Wally Caldwell, manager of Loew's (New) Theatre, Toledo, Ohio, part in celebration of the revamped house and the balance in honor of "Arrowsmith" and a "Gala Big Show." Following is a resume of what took place.

Permission was granted by the City Council to decorate downtown streets with fan-shaped flags containing muslin one-sheets placed between (black on yellow) and stretched across streets from trolley poles, two copies on each line. Either side of trolley wires read as follows: "Loew's New Theatre Celebration: Sinclair Lewis' "Arrowsmith" and "Gala Big Show." Theatre, building, marquee and immediate neighborhood of theatre were also decorated with flags, pennants and garlands.

The campaign included windows in three prominent department stores, exclusively devoted to new theatre and picture copy; 16 special downtown windows with 14 x 17 mounted de luxe specials; one dozen bulkheads on exclusive, downtown wreckers bulkhead; One-sheets in largest garage; one sheets on 15 public drays; 3,000 heralds in exclusive neighborhood section; 1,000 heralds in baskets at market; heralds to patrons; taxi streamers on 100 taxis; 200 one sheet cards at regular locations in city; advance and special stories on both theatre and picture in newspapers; layout views of theatre in paper; extra size ads in all papers before and on opening day; gratis full page in roto section of paper; salutes from several radio stations, and a welcoming speech on opening night by the Vice-Mayor. The usual flowers, telegrams, etc., were in evidence.

Those of you who have followed Caldwell's past campaigns will at once recognize that his usual thorough-going system was again employed in the above. We're glad to know that he now has a more modern house to sell and will await further news from this member.

SEVERAL COSTLESS STUNTS FEATURED IN DICK MOSS' CAMPAIGN

It is evident that Dick Moss, manager of the United Artists Theatre, Los Angeles, and his publicity aide, Jack Proctor, were running true to form when they campaigned on "The Greeks Had a Word for Them." A number of no-cost stunts featured their work.

A tie-up was made with one of the large department stores for the display of photos mounted on 11 x 14 cards, placed in several windows. This deal received publicity in newspapers, lobby and on screen. Through another tie-up with a large outfitting company 20,000 circulars were distributed via store mailing system. Two other windows in choice downtown spots were devoted to tying in picture with a hand lotion.

Ribbons with appropriate copy were worn by the ushers two weeks in advance of showing and also by 200 drug concern clerks, with a little space on the ones used by the latter to plug a fountain special.

Additional effort included the mailing of postcards to every fraternity and sorority in the city, with teaser copy reading, "The Greeks had a word for them but we can't print it on a postal card." Tie-ups were also made with three local radio broadcasting stations for the broadcast of fifty word announcements several times daily during run of picture. Cost was taken care of by a half-dozen pair of passes for each station. Life size cutouts were spotted in the lobby two weeks in advance.

Since getting a line on the above we hear that the United Artists has closed for the summer season and that Moss and Proctor are to be put in charge of another house. We'll let you all know where they are just as soon as we are tipped off. In the meantime we know that both will be hitting their usual pace.

POSTER ART WORK FOR THE THEATRE!

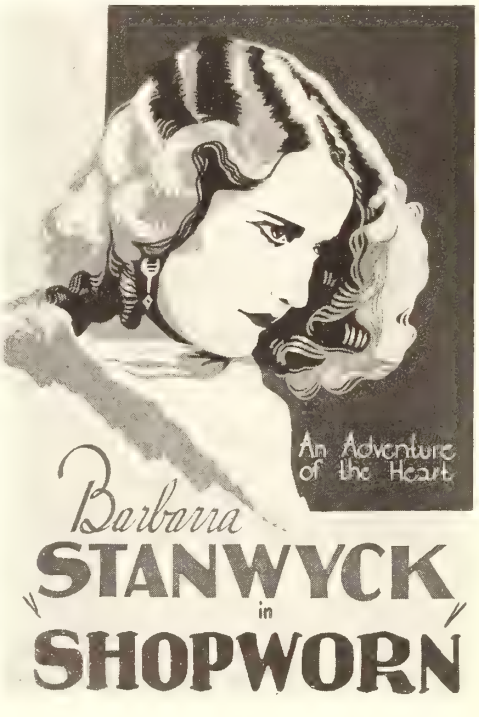
Since special issues and important articles crowded the regular appearance of this series off the pages for a short time we have been receiving many grand poster illustrations. So, here we are back on the job and let's hope that nothing will happen to interrupt the series again.



This one is from D. E. Horsfall of the Warner Theatre in Elmira, N. Y. Others to follow include many new contributors as well as most of our old reliables.

Thanks kindly old-timers as well as the new artists. We'll try to make each reproduction of your posters clear and helpful so that others may benefit from the series.

MANY NOVEL ANGLES IN CAMPAIGN MINTZ MADE ON "LIFE" FILM

A thorough and novel campaign, from special invitation preview to an ape bally, was recently waged in connection with "Mystery of Life" by N. L. Mintz, manager of the Oxford Theatre, Plainfield, N. J. He was assisted by J. Koerpel, of the Publix home office, and Dan Halperin, special representative from Universal.

The invitation preview was held for local ministers, educators, city officials, heads of clubs and the press. At the preview, special post cards were distributed, on which members of the audience were requested to note whatever comments they had to make concerning the picture. These were later used in advertising and publicity.

Lawyers, doctors and other professional men were reached through a special mailing campaign covering the city and all surrounding towns. In order to cover the homes in the territory 10,000 heralds were given a house to house distribution, and 1,000 telephones were made to homes. 1,300 post cards were sent to the theatre's regular mailing list.

Window displays of biological specimens borrowed from the American Museum of Natural History in New York City were used in prominent downtown stores, consisting of authentic articles of early forms of life as compared to those shown on the accessory "tree of Life." 40 x 60 enlargements of stills were used to heighten the display.

The ape bally walked around the busy sections of the town with a large advertising sign on his chest and caused plenty of excitement. An elaborate front and lobby was constructed especially for the engagement. Shoe, book, drug and sporting goods stores also contributed windows.

MICKEY MOUSE CLUB IS GOOD PUBLICITY FOR SONNY SHEPHERD

Wading through the several sections of a Miami, Fla., Sunday newspaper impresses us with the fact that Sonny Shepherd, manager of the Biltmore Theatre, in that city, is getting his share of representation in that publication, a goodly percentage due to the popularity of his Mickey Mouse Orchestra and Entertainers.

Mickey is here and there and all over town. One long announcement states that he and associates are the added attraction at the "Roman Pools"; a three-column photo in the society section shows one of the little girl members participating in an Easter egg hunt, and during an aquatic event at the Beach we again note that "the Biltmore Mickey Mouse Club will entertain with music, singing and dancing." And there are some more, but the foregoing will be sufficient to let you all know that Shepherd's club is quite the cat's down Miami way. Glancing back in the theatre ad section, we note that the Biltmore carries a small space in the group ad, which, all in all, is not so bad.

Readers have been told before that Shepherd has succeeded in banding together an unusually enthusiastic club of youngsters and the above is just some additional evidence of that fact. Keep up the excellent work, Sonny, and continue to let us know what's doing down in your town.

WHY BE SO EXCLUSIVE? C'MON IN!

AL ZIMBALIST is not the famous composer-musician but editor of "Howdy," the Warner theatre house organ in New Jersey. Between taking a whack at publicity and manufacture of superlatives for his pet magazine ("not a bulletin," says Al) he manages to keep on the loop around Newark and other points west. However, he believes that he's helping out the boys and that's a great satisfaction to him, and also to Publicity Chief Harry Goldberg. While not a manager of a theatre, Al, through special dispensation from P. T. Barnum, Dexter Fellows, etc., is hereby elected a member of the Round Table Club. We trust that he will faithfully serve his brother showmen in the matter of shooting in some constructive suggestions to this department.

———Wear Your Club Pin! ! !———

H. W. WILLS is a former newspaper man and newcomer to showbusiness and we're mighty glad to welcome him as a new member of the Round Table Club. He recently completed 10 years in the advertising and merchandising end of newspaper publishing and from what we happen to know about work done in that field there can be no doubt but that he will fit showbusiness like the paper on the wall. For the past month or so he has been filling the job of advertising and house manager for the Palace Theatre, operated by the Syamore Amusement Co., Petersburg, Va., and we predict that Club members will hear a lot more about Wills' work in future issues. We'll tell you elsewhere in this department about a little gag he's been using to good advantage in his town.

———Wear Your Club Pin! ! !———

JAMES ANDERSON is the manager of the Capitol Theatre out in Racine, Wis., and we are taking this opportunity to record that he, too, is now a full-fledged member of this great organization of showmen. All you need do to keep in good standing with your host of fellow Club members, James, is to regularly contribute some practical show-selling ideas to this department. Start the good work at the first opportunity that comes along and let's know what brand of showmanship you're practicing out in Racine.

———Wear Your Club Pin! ! !———

LOUIS N. STONE (not Louis Stone, the character man) hails from out in Molalla, Ore., where he skippers the Lyric Theatre and as the result of his recent application for membership in the Round Table Club he, too, is now wearing one of the Club pins. Now that you're a member of this go-getting outfit of showmen, Louis, unbend that writing arm and let's have an eyeful of what kind of stunts you're using to put the Lyric over the top. Oregon is another state that's chock full of Round Tablers who have made important contributions to this department, so we'll look to you to put your shoulder to the wheel.

———Wear Your Club Pin! ! !———

TOM McMAHON is Number 2 among the New York City managers in this week's crop of new Club members and this Round Tabler is skipper of the Uptown Theatre, 170th street and Broadway, almost within hailing distance of Arthur Chase, manager of the Costello. Glad to have you with the gang, Tom, and this is also a reminder to you to pass along any show dope you may have at hand which will be of benefit to your fellow showmen. Shoot it in at the first opportunity that comes along.

BILL C. TALLEY is a former exchange man who went showman some time ago and he's located down in Lumberton, N. C., where he manages the Carolina Theatre. For seven years he peddled film for the Brothers Warner out of Charlotte and then the show bug bit him right in back of his ears. So meet Bill, you other Round Tablers, and congratulate him for having joined the liveliest group of showmen in the world. We venture that we'll all hear more concerning this new member's activities in showbusiness. He should know a thing or two about buying product. What say, Bill?

———Wear Your Club Pin! ! !———

JOSE YOVIN hails from the City of Brotherly Love, popularly known as Philadelphia, Pa., where he manages the Liberty and Tacony theatres, and at this writing it is our pleasure to record that he's another recently-elected Round Tabler. Welcome to this organization, Jose, and how about coming through with some good show-selling tips that the other members can use to good advantage. Let your fellow Clubmen know what methods you're using to fill seats.

———Wear Your Club Pin! ! !———

ISRAEL SCHANCUPP frankly admits that he has been procrastinating for a matter of months the act of sending in an application for membership in this organization, but finally accomplished same by locking his office door while knocking off the few required words. He (Israel, no less) was so excited at the time that he enclosed a dollar for a membership fee, which, we have already explained to him, is out as far as membership fees are concerned, but may be set aside for the purchase of a Club pin if he so desires. At any rate, he's one of the gang, now, and he promises to try and repay some of his fellow showmen for their contributions by sending along some of his.

NICHOLAS FREEMAN is the assistant manager of the Morton Theatre, Dorchester, Mass., a house in charge of Albert Laurie. Prior to going with the Morton, where he has been for the past 20 months, he acted as assistant manager of the Central Square Theatre, Cambridge. He started in this game as an usher and has been steadily climbing the ladder ever since. The name of Laurie is synonymous with showbusiness over in New England and with Al's able coaching it probably will not be long before Freeman will be handling his own house. Keep in touch with the Club, Nick, so we can forward the framed certificate when it is due.

———Wear Your Club Pin! ! !———

HARRY MILLSTEIN manages the Duffield Theatre, one of the pioneer houses in Brooklyn, N. Y. If the Duffield were able to talk it could relate a first-class history of the movies, for it has seen most of them come and go at one of the busy spots in the city. The mere fact that the house has carried on all these years is proof that it is located in a good neighborhood. Therefore, we are glad to record that its manager has become a member of this organization and will look forward to hearing what he's doing for showbusiness.

———Wear Your Club Pin! ! !———

JOHN R. TKACH hails from out in Hebron, N. Dak., where he manages the Rialto Theatre, and he's another new member in line for introduction to his many fellow Round Tablers. Your state is well represented in this organization, John, and we're glad to include your name on the Club roster. Many a good show-selling tip has come to headquarters from Dakota showmen and it is to be hoped that Tkach will do his share to keep up the excellent reputation set by his brother managers. Send along some information, John, and we'll see that it's broadcast.

———Wear Your Club Pin! ! !———

ARTHUR B. CHASE is another New York City manager to join the ranks of the Round Table Club and he holds forth at the Costello Theatre, Broadway and 159th Street. At this writing Chase is wearing a Club membership pin and we're taking this opportunity to introduce him to the rest of the gang. As soon as you get a bit of spare time, Art, send along some information on what you are doing to sell shows in your neighborhood. Your many fellow Round Tablers will be interested.

———Wear Your Club Pin! ! !———

W. P. McLAUGHLIN operates the Glen Theatre in Glen Ellyn, Ill., and along with his subscription to the Herald came a request for his name to be added to the ever-growing list of Round Tablers. Okay, Mack; you're a bona fide member of this exalted order right now, and we sincerely hope that you'll contribute your share of interesting show-selling tips to this department. Let the rest of the outfit in on that last stunt you used to good results.

———Wear Your Club Pin! ! !———

RAY BOWMAN is Number 3 on the list of New York City managers to become a member of this week's crop of Round Tablers and he holds forth at the Kameo Theatre, 4367 Third Avenue. Show-selling methods are still popular up around Ray's neighborhood and unless we're very much mistaken this new Clubman's fellow showmen can look for some dope on how seats are filled at the Kameo. Get the habit, Ray, and let's hear regularly on what you are doing for showbusiness over your way.

STAGE ATTRACTIONS
FOR PICTURE THEATRES

SPOTS & SHOTS ON BROADWAY

Mitzi Green, who is broadcasting on the Nestle Chocolateers airway, is doing her remarkable impersonations with as much success in the invisible medium as she does on the stage. Mitzi is only twelve, but she's putting on bumps and if you want to see her as a juvenile in person you must hurry. They do grow. Leo Morrison signed up Mitzi with Radio to play little Orphan Annie in a film version of Harold Gray's syndicated cartoons. This makes Mitzi a big shot entertainer as Gray's cartoon has a large circulation.

Wynne Wayne left Loew's Capitol in Syracuse to appear in Schwartz Bros. "Follies Bergere." Wynne says money did it. . . . Nat Morton is busy booking 'em. He placed Evelyn Cashway in the Orpheum, De Loris Leland in the Republic and Margie Penetti in the Bijou, Philadelphia.

Floyd Gibbons is rattling off a machine gun fire of pertinent comment at the New York Palace on his recent experiences in China. They go over big. Gibbons would be an attraction on any stage if only for his ability to throw the contents of the dictionary around faster than any three human beings living, and then some. . . .

Josephine Harmon, the comedienne, is rushing her new act which will be ready for booking in a couple of weeks. She is working with Marion Murray. Edward Davis is the author of her new venture. Josephine was in the van of Earl Carroll's Vanities.

The rapid fire wanderer Bob Ripley is back with a brand new pocketful of tricks. The most wonderful of all Bob's stunts is how he gets his dope.

Bud Pollard is still hard at work on his Southland Pictures. . . . Clement Wood's "Glory Road" will be one of the films to be directed at the Metropolitan Studios. It is an all black story. The title of the story is the same as the song Lawrence Tibbett sings, which Wood also wrote.

Sam Roth of Faro Publishing, Inc., published a book on the Lindbergh kidnapping and already someone wants to film it.

Fatty Arbuckle is before the New York public on his comeback road.

Warners will make a film around the life of Ivar Kruger, the Swedish Match King. It will probably be titled "The Light that Failed."

Harry Langdon, it seems, must stay in vaudeville even with a couple of picture contracts teasing him. Legal reasons.

Fred Craven.

Dan Parker Is in Theatrical Publicity Business for Self

Danny Parker, wellknown to the music and show world as formerly connected with the Radio Keith Orpheum Corporation in both the Music and Radio departments, is now in business for himself. He is specializing in theatrical publicity and has already contracted a number of wellknown personalities. With offices at 1520 Broadway and a staff prepared for operation, we wish him well in his new venture.

HENRI A. KEATES

Here is a good likeness of the organist "who put community singing on the map." He has been in the game for the past twenty-two years, and has been featured on nearly every circuit. Keates has the distinction of having opened every new Balaban and Katz theatre in Chicago for the past eight years. He has just terminated a three months' engagement at the RKO St. Louis theatre and has just returned to Chicago, where he opened Friday, May 13th, at the Warner Brothers Avalon theatre.

Hugo Riesenfeld Honored On Return to Theatre Field

The musical world and representatives of the music and film trade press and of New York's newspaper field attended a reception at the Astor Hotel on Saturday last, in honor of Hugo Riesenfeld, who has returned to the Broadway theatre field as the head of a new 80-piece symphony orchestra at the New York Roxy theatre.

Carlton Coon Dead

Carlton Coon, well known Kansas City orchestra leader, long identified with the popular Coon-Sanders Nighthawk Orchestra, died last Wednesday at the Henrotin Hospital of blood poisoning which developed from an abscessed jaw. His wife and mother survive him.

Bernie Signs Radio Contract

Ben Bernie, orchestra leader, has signed a new long term contract with the Columbia Broadcasting System. The contract was signed in Chicago, where Bernie completed a week's vaudeville appearance during a current tour.

UP AND DOWN THE ALLEY

HELLO, EVERYBODY!

As you will have noticed, starting this week the title of this department is "Stage Attractions" and as such it will be known hereafter. . . . In it we will feature personalities mainly, though music, radio, and so on, will continue to be an outstanding feature. . . . What we aim to do is bridge that gap between the front of the house and the back.

Ed Wynn, stage comedian and now known as the "Texaco Fire Chief," who is being featured over NBC networks, says the best ten years of a woman's life are those between twenty-eight and thirty. . . .

The American Society of Authors and Composers, the Music Publishers' Protective Association and M. Witmark & Sons, deserve a vote of thanks from all music publishers for their fight against the bootleg song-sheet selling evil. . . . It's tough enough to sell music these days as it is and the song selling racket nearly grew out of bounds, but due to the arrest and conviction of one, Ted Harris, ex-pugilist and one of the leading offenders, it appears that it won't be long until publishers will not have to worry about that particular thing any more. . . . The defendant was prosecuted by M. Witmark & Sons, Julian Rosenthal, representing the society. . . . The verdict, handed down by Judge Flood, of $50 fine or 10 days in jail, is the stiffest that has been meted out to any of these offenders. . . . Others of the same ilk as Harris, having jammed the courtroom, will take this as a drastic warning and mayhap abide by what they heard and saw. . . .

Mr. and Mrs. Herbert Koch, popularly known as Mr. & Mrs. Herbie, who entertained at the twin consoles of the Saenger in N'Orleans for the past two years, are now featured at the consoles of Shea's Buffalo theatre, Buffalo, N. Y. . . . Ray MacNamara, local favorite in New Orleans, is soloing in their place. . . . Will Gilroy, local favorite at the Pitkin Theatre, Brooklyn, now has an opportunity to increase his popularity. . . . He is being featured on the programs of radio station WMIL, Brooklyn. . . . Art Brown, organist at the Richmond, Virginia, Byrd theatre, is another who has gone on the air. . . . By that I mean he is broadcasting from WRVA, three times a week. . . .

Guy Lombardo and His Royal Canadians, who recently completed a successful two weeks at the Brooklyn and New York Paramount theatres, are scheduled to make four Midwest stops on their tour of Publix houses. . . . Even though they will be all over the map, plans call for their weekly chain broadcast of the Robert Burns program while on tour. . . . Russ Colombo, NBC "Romeo of Song," is now installed as director of his own orchestra at the Woodmansten Inn, outlying roadhouse, and will be heard nightly except Wednesday and Sunday, over NBC-WEAF networks. . . . S'Long. . . .

Ed Dawson.

REVIEWS OF ACTS

KATE SMITH
Brooklyn Albee

Kate Smith, famed "Songbird of the South" is at her best in this week's show. She is always sure to stop the show and she didn't fail here. Her grand singing earned her two encores and if she hadn't been on longer than her allotted time as far as the customers were concerned, she could have continued singing forever.—E. D.

MILLS BROTHERS (4)
New York Paramount

These colored boys, borrowed from the radio, did draw decidedly as the show caught. There is no doubt about their being an attraction of the first rank. They do a lot of entertaining, singing in their own inimitable fashion, and when they are through, the audience yells for more.—F. C.

SYLVIA NELSON

EVELYN HOEY
Brooklyn Paramount

This musical comedy star does very well here with her torch singing of "Devil and the Deep Blue Sea," and her "scat" singing of "Kickin' the Gong Around.' She is personable, a good singer and a good bet for any theatre looking for a personality girl with plenty of what it takes.—E. D.

ADELAIDE HALL

They do a piano and singing act, featuring popular tunes, interspersed with laughable stories and gags. They earn a good reception.

NOVELTY

ROBBINS TRIO

These spectacular roller skaters give many daring and graceful bits of skill. One of the two men holds the other by an arm and foot and skates in a circle at such speed that she is swung parallel to the floor, at the same time holding the girl in his arms.

BOB, BOB AND BOBBIE
Baltimore Keith's

First they do some Indian club work, then toss balls into the audience, to be tossed back and caught on the tip of a knife blade held in the mouth. The dog stands on the back of one of the performers and catches soft clubs juggled.

The one carries the other in a bag, in coming on stage. They use a kitchen broom to advantage in their tumbling, and a cornet and flute add to the fun. These acrobatic clowns are entertaining performers.

RUTON'S TRAINED DOGS
San Antonio Sadler's

Mr. and Mrs. Ruton put the fine canines through a series of tricks that prove highly entertaining.

BUD CARLELL (2)
Baltimore Hippodrome

Novelty twirling of ropes and snapping of bullwhips. Bud's climatic act is twirling five loops at one time, two on the hips, two in his hands and one in his mouth.

FRANCIS RENAULT
San Francisco Warfield

This famous female impersonator has a very good voice. He tells some good yarns and his beautiful gown and the way he wears them leaves many wondering if he is really a man.

DE WOLF, METCALF AND FORD
Cincinnati Albee

The trio, a man and two girls, do solo, duo and triple steps, plus aero and eccentric dances in which the man presents some unusual contortions.

MEL KLEE
Baltimore Hippodrome

This blackface singer is also a monologist. He introduces two colored lads, Tommy and Floyd, who he says he picked up in Chattanooga. The boys play the piano, sing and do some novelty tap steps.

DANCERS

GORDON, REED AND KING
New York Paramount

These three male dancers are artistically worked into the show and they cover themselves with glory in both their work with the ensemble and in their own specialty of tap work. They dance wonderfully and set a standard of their own.—F. C.

FRITZ AND JEAN HUBERT
Baltimore Hippodrome

They intermingle "drunk" eccentric steps with some acrobatic work and falls, gaining many laughs. This brother and sister act is the best of its kind in the business.

TAMERA GEVA
Brooklyn Paramount

In this week's show, Miss Geva offers one of her inimitable jazz toe routines. The young lady is exceptionally graceful, good to look at and a first class performer. Audience reaction was very favorable.—E. D.

THE THREE BERNIE BROTHERS
New York Capitol

These three boys dressed in a modified evening dress, do some splendid ensemble dancing. However, the act gets the best of its applause when the individuals do separate work in their challenge dancing. They have plenty of personality and go over favorably.—F. C.

JIMMY HADREAS
Milwaukee Wisconsin

A clever dancer. In the role of street cleaner he steps off a number of dances representing various countries. He then adds some snappy acrobatics.

NELL O'DAY AND TOMMY ATKINS SEXTETTE
Brooklyn Albee

Miss O'Day and her six dancing boys open their act in one following and working for the next 20 minutes in a neat full stage setting. Being used as an opening act this week, they failed to get their customary good reception. They have also changed their routine to include singing, which adds to the act. Their dance routines could be changed so as not to have so many repeating of stunts.—E. D.

THE LE GAILS
New York Capitol

This male and female team offer a very attractive rough-house Apache number. It is so well done that one fears for the life of the girl member who is tossed around so vigorously. Very good.—F. C.

AARON SISTERS (3)

Brooklyn Fox

Attractive harmony singing girls from the South. The young ladies specialize and feature hillbilly songs, one in the number two spot, in one, and another later in a full stage set. The harmonizing in their soft southern drawl and twang is distinctly novel and the act, with a little comedy injected, is a good bet for any picture house.—E. D.

CLIFF EDWARDS

Philadelphia Mastbaum

He plays several selections on his ukulele, and sings them. His wisecracks draw even greater response. "Ukulele Ike," as he was known in vaudeville, before he went into pictures, is even more entertaining in person than he is in the laughable characterizations he portrays in the films.

Stars on Capitol Stage

Among the stage, screen and radio stars scheduled to appear at the Capitol in New York, during the week of May 13, are Edmund Lowe, Victor McLaglen, Fifi D'Orsay, Burns and Allen, Cab Calloway, Arthur Tracy.

Brooklyn Paramount

Judnick, who has been lobby accordianist for the past two years at this house, is occasionally brought on the stage to work in the stageshow. D.

JOHNNY DUFF

DANCERS

ANITA AVILA AND JACK NILE

New York Capitol

This team offer an apache dance routine that is extremely well done. In the final scene of their dance which runs from the most refined to the most brutal, Jack Nile hurls Anita clear off the stage into the orchestra. He pulls her back by the hair, and closes the dance by throwing her in the wings.—F. C.

HELEN MOORE

San Francisco Warfield

Assisted by six sailor boy friends, she offers some lively steps and acrobatics, with the William Tell overture presented in dance form.

DAVID BINES GIRLS (16)

New York Paramount

This act opens rather slowly but retrieves itself later to such an extent that one forgets the awkward beginning.

The show goes dark and reveals the sixteen girls in phosphorized extremities. They do the substantial part of their act seated and the effect is novel and pleasing.—F. C.

DENNIS WHITE AND GIRLS

Baltimore Hippodrome

Bernice Marshall, Betty Keane, Marla and Erla join Dennis White in a dancing and singing revue, "Keeping Up with the Times," with several changes of costume and scenery.

CHESTER HALE'S PARISIENNES (16)

New York Capitol

A bevy of beautiful girls do a stunning dance number in variegated lights and shadows. The dancing in places drops a little but the excellence of the ensemble composition compensates for that. There is a good deal of F. C. snake hips stuff that goes over big with the audience.

Theatre Headliners Help Press Club's Celebration

A four hundred million dollar disaster seems an odd thing to celebrate but the great fire of 1906 is given a sendoff annually by the Press Club of San Francisco. This year's celebration was held at the Golden Gate theatre and was marked by the participation of musicians and stage stars from many other houses.

Jay Brower and His Merrymakers, with Peggy O'Neill's Sweet Sixteen Girls, were on hand from the El Capitan; Hermie King and his joy gang came from the Warfield theatre across the street; The NBC Studios provided Walter Beban and the Spotlight Revue; Doctor Rockwell shooed the blues away, Vernon Rathburn and his saxotet went over from the Oakland Orpheum. Claude Sweeten and his RKOlians played the show.

REVIEWS OF ACTS

COMEDY

JOHNNY PERKINS

Brooklyn Albee

Perkins, who is billed as "A Ton of Fun," is just that. His is an act that should not have an idle moment, he, especially makes you forget the blues, working hard throughout the show as master of ceremonies and in specialties of his own.

He carries with him two singers, Ruth Petty and Richard Montgomery who are both show stoppers. Miss Petty is a beautiful young lady who sells her blues singing with a marvelous display of showmanship and Richard, a young colored boy with a wonderful voice, gives the audiences something to applaud over too. Johnny Perkins, as an entertainer, can be rated as excellent, plus.—E. D.

BURNS AND ALLEN

New York Paramount

This week these excellent comedians offer their routine of snappy gags in a "book store" setting, similar to the one they used in one of their recent shorts. Their routine consists of Nat Burns' straight playing against Gracie Allen's "dumb" answers. They are one of the cleverest teams of its kind.—F. C.

RADCLIFF AND ROGERS

New York Capitol

These colored boys present a routine of singing, piano playing and gags that is far above the average. Though most of their work is done with characteristic slow movements there is never a dull moment in the act. Radcliff's vocal efforts got a big hand and the whole act went over well.—F. C.

HOWARD, FINE AND HOWARD

Denver Orpheum

Three of the lads are dressed in old-fashioned ham actor costumes and, aided by Jack Walsh, their nonsense goes over fairly well. A girl adds to the act with unusual acrobatic-contortionist work.

BETTY AND JERRY BROWNE

This team presents a comedy skit, with Betty doing a Dumb Dora type.

HARRY ROSE

Brooklyn Paramount

Harry Rose, "The Broadway Jester," acts as master of ceremonies throughout the show and for his own specialty sings a few numbers. Putting the audience in a jovial mood with his laughable stories and gags, is Harry's forte. The comedy version of "Pagliacci," which he sings and explains is an extremely laughable bit and one that earns him plenty applause.—E. D.

CHRISTY AND NATARO

Brooklyn Fox

A male team featuring a continual line of chatter throughout their comedy acrobatic turn. The act is good for loads of laughs and with the exception of slowing up in places with some unnecessary talk which could easily be eliminated, is good for picture houses.—E. D.

FRANK AND MILT BRITTON AND GANG

Brooklyn Paramount

This band, noted for their comedy, held up their end of the bill with a brand of hokum that is difficult for other bands to equal. The band, composed of 9 musicians, who really play well despite the continuous interruptions by their fellow members, is a "natural" for picture houses.—E. D.

BOB HOPE

Baltimore Keith's

He does eccentric comedy work and two girls and three men join him in "Antics of 1932," consisting of several blackout sketches, with assistance of two "plants" in the audience.

MARTY MAY

Omaha Orpheum

He clowns with the audience, pretends to play special numbers on banjo, whiskbroom and violin, then plays the banjo with the broom. Jean Carroll, assisting him, does a tap dance.

MILLS AND SHEA

Milwaukee Wisconsin

As two goofy gobs they tumble about in an agile and comic manner.

John Hand Will Direct Polo Grounds Festival

John Hand, the musical director, who left the films to direct the New York Light Opera Guild, has been engaged by Maurice Frank, the impresario, to direct a performance of "Aida" for the Open Air Opera of New York, to be performed at the Polo Grounds on June 24th. John Hand is the first American conductor to have been so honored. This has caused quite a deal of adverse comment among the foreign musisians of the city who labor under the impression that only Europeans need apply for the big musical jobs when the classic operas are to be done. The performance will be filmed, as a feature and for the newsreels.

Network Adds Station

A new radio station, CKWO, has been added to the Columbia Broadcasting System and will serve Michigan, southeastern Ontario and adjacent territory in the United States and Canada. The station will be inaugurated on June 1, with studios in Detroit and Windsor, Ont.

300 Ask Orchestra Places

The funeral of Charles C. Kilgen, 73, who died at his St. Louis home last week, after a short illness, was held on Monday. Kilgen had been president of George Kilgen & Son, Inc., known as the world's largest builders of pipe organs.

Benny Fields, Edwards on Air

Blossom Seeley and her husband, Benny Fields, have been signed for a series of radio broadcasts over a National Broadcasting Company network. Cliff Edwards, film player, will conduct a novelty orchestra over an NBC network in a series of six programs.

ORGAN SOLOS

BERNIE COWHAM (New York Bayside West Victory) the "Adopted Son of Flushing," has been adopted by this near-by community. Bernie's opening solo consisted of his usual intimate line of chatter before the playing of each singing number and the following songs; "Was that the Human Thing to Do," "Paradise," "Old Kentucky Home," and "Just Friends." This reviewer has never seen a demonstration for an organist as great as the one given this popular Cowham fellow.

As soon as his title slide was shown, the applause shook the house and it was with difficulty that he even started his solo. The audience seemingly content just to have him at their house. Finally he was able to get started and it must have done Bernie's heart good to hear the way the audience sang for him. At the finish, by actual timing, he was given an ovation that kept up for 5½ minutes. It was necessary to take the feature picture off the screen and allow him an encore. This organist certainly does mean something in this part of New York.

ARTHUR GUTOW (Detroit Michigan) played "mail carrier" to his audience, delivering a copious bag titled "Musical Mail" a batch of notes that won ready response. Interspersed with fetching lyrics concerning his fan mail, Gutow played "Somebody Loves You," "Starlight," the saucy "You've Got Me Between the Devil and the Deep Blue Sea," ending with "Faded Summer Love."

AL GULLICKSON (Milwaukee Warner) entertains in his usual effective manner. This week he uses the songs, "Home," "Keeping Out of Mischief Now," "Somebody Loves Me," "My Paradise," a novelty song to the tune of "You're the One," and "By the Fireside." In connection with "Somebody Love Me," Al invited the boys and girls to sing sections of the song separately, while the novelty song featured every word in it starting with the letter "s". The words to all selections were flashed upon the screen and as usual Al received hearty applause.

MERLE CLARK and ELSIE THOMPSON (Brooklyn Paramount) at the twin consoles entertain the audiences with an organ duet entitled "Imitations." As usual, Merle does the announcing and Elsie does her specialty of crooning a number. This, of course, is besides playing together throughout the presentation. The opening number was an imitation of Chevalier singing "One Hour With You," with the audience supposed to do the Chevalier. Very few sank in the Chevalier manner, but they did sing in their own. Following this with other imitations with the songs "Talk it Over," "Paradise," and "Strangers," Elsie then imitated herself, singing a chorus of "Paradise," with the usual great hand greeting her at finish.

Audience reaction to this pair is very favorable and they really are box-office attractions at this house.

CON MAFFIE (New York Paradise) entitled his organ solo "Gems," and orally introduced each number as symbolic of a particular jewel. Songs featured were: "You're the One," "Trees," "Lovable," special to "Don't Know Why," and a final chorus of "Love, You Funny Thing." Outstanding in the solo was the production built around the song "Trees." For this, Maffie played the number in concert style as the stage disclosed an appropriate setting in which two girls enacted the story told in the lyrics of the song. All in all this solo was an outstanding one, due to Maffie's ingenious manipulation of the organ and his innate artistic ability. The performance drew an appreciative reception.

CLARENCE LEVERENZ (Kalamazoo State) as his share in welcoming spring presented a medley of approproiate compositions introduced with the title "A Spring Concert." Opening the solo with the introductory strains of Mendelssohn's "Spring Song," followed by a new waltz, "When the Flower's are Blooming in the Springtime," "Lilies of the Valley," "Chimes of Spring," storm effects used as introduction to "April Showers," which is played classically and then in fox-trot tempo for finale. Clever effects and Leverenz's fine playing put the solo over very well and earned him a generous amount of applause. This young chap is very popular here and since he has not been featured in the past few weeks, this concert was doubly appreciated.

OVERTURES

AL EVANS (New York Paradise) conductor of this fine orchestra, compiled the overture of "Popular Hits," and entitled it as such.

Opening with a special arrangement of "Milanburg Joys," the overture moves swiftly through the strains of "I'm Sorry Dear," featuring it as a saxophone solo, with softly played string accompaniment. For the next number, "Sing a New Song," the trombone is featured with full band accompaniment trumpet solo with strings, organ and piano blending in softly on the song, "Paradise." The pianist then does a solo of "Rag Doll," and a violin solo, with organ accompaniment of "You're My Everything," following. A hot arrangement of "Black Maria" closed the overture. Evans is a capable leader and is very popular with this audience.

FREDDY MACK (Brooklyn Fox) and his Joy Gang presented an overture built around the ever-popular "St. Louis Blues," of outstanding quality and as usual did very well with it. Opening with a specially arranged full band introduction, fading down to the soft melodious strains of a muted trumpet, the band used a good modulation and went into the stirring strains of "St. Louis Blues." Not only do they play a symphonic arrangement of this anthem, but they offer comedy versions, interpolated with "scat" singing, led by Mack, and a finale of "lowdown" blues. For real playing, novel arrangements and entertainment, this aggregation, led by the popular Mack, is out of the ordinary, and always rates more applause than anything else on the bill.

LEON VAN GELDER (Jersey City Stanley). The popular conductor of the Stanley's orchestra of 16 musicians dedicated this week's program to, as he put it, "Your Mother and Mine." After the oral introduction by Leon, a story on slides was superimposed on a beautiful "Mother picture" background. A number of appropriate songs were compiled and presented in this outstanding overture. Leon himself won applause with his own violin solo of "Dear Old Pal." The overture closed with a good rendition of "Memories," and an appreciate reception from the audience.

The BLUEBOOK School

By F. H. RICHARDSON

BLUEBOOK SCHOOL QUESTION NO. 127.—(A) Describe the three-wire bell circuit, using diagram in black ink, if desired. (B) Tell us how you would proceed to install one or two fire alarm bells or buzzers in such a way that the bell or bells could be rung from any one of two or more buttons located in various parts of the theatre? (C) By means of an ink sketch, show us how circuits may be arranged to illuminate and extinguish lights in various compartments of a proscenium program board.

Answer to Question No. 120

Bluebook School Question No. 120 was: "(A) Using an ordinary arc, in what proportion does the light-giving power of a crater increase with doubling of amperage, correct size carbons being used in each case? (B) Do observed results as to crater area, and results as per formula on Page 396 of the Bluebook, agree? (C) Using the ordinary arc and correct lens system, should there be loss of light if the arc current is below 60 amperes? (By loss of light we are not referring to loss at the spot or rotating shutter). (D) With the ordinary arc, why is it that there is increased light loss after the amperage is increased above 60?

I was just a bit astonished at the number who fell down rather flat on this one, or on some sections of it. As a matter of fact, only 11 men made the grade acceptably on them all, showing that most of you still have need to study your Bluebooks quite a bit. More than 500 men left Sections C and D blank. James Devoy added this note to his answer:

"For a long while we of this theatre (four men) only glanced at the School once in a while, and made quite a bit of fun of it, I'm ashamed to admit. We all study the questions each week now, spend a lot of time discussing them, hunting up the answers and seeing how close we can get to 'correct' when the answer comes. My own answers are really made up from the knowledge and efforts of myself and three others, namely Frank Davis, Tom Ackerman and John L. Baker. We have but one criticism of the school, namely, once in a while we find the same question asked more than once. Cut that out, Brother Richardson. We need all the space we can get for the School. Asking questions twice is a waste of space."

I stand corrected. That does happen occasionally, but the work is pretty heavy and all I can do is the best I am able to.

"If the current be doubled, it will be found that the crater area will have increased 2.46 times. Therefore, since the candle-power equals the square millimeter area of the crater times its light-giving power per square millimeter, it follows that the light will be increased in exactly the same proportion as is the crater area. The relationship may be expressed in a formula such as:

"Crater area KC 1.3 in square inches, in which C represents the current flow and K the constant 0.00092, the latter for use with National carbons only."

Regarding Section B, Evans and Rau say:

"Observed results as to crater area, and calculated results as per formula on Page 396, Vol. 1, of the Bluebook, agree satisfactorily; as, for instance, if the amperage be 25, the observed crater area be .05 of a square inch, and the calculated crater area be .06 of a square inch, and then the amperage be raised to 50, the observed crater area becomes .15 of a square inch, and the calculated area the same, all of which proves that the candle-power of the crater is increased 2.46 times by doubling the current flow. However, it must be admitted that calculated results are more nearly correct than observed results, since 2.46x.05 = .1230, whereas 2.46x.06 = .1476, the latter figure being very close to .15, as set forth in the table. Should the current flow be again doubled (raised to 100), the observed and calculated results will be found to agree exactly."

I think we will hear from G. E. Doe on Section C. He says:

"Assuming the current to be d.c., the optical system to be correct (both as to its various individual elements and their adjustment with relation to each other), and the light source located a minimum distance from the collector condenser lens, there should be no avoidable loss of light under the conditions named. However, after studying both C and D, I have donned my war bonnet in the belief that you have blundered (Bing! Take that!) in wording the parenthesis. What I believe is that you meant to direct our attention to the possible great losses that an increase of amperage over and above about 60 sets up at the cooling plate. If so, you eliminated all that when you parenthesized the spot-loss out."

Correct, Friend Doe. I accept the sock on the chin for the reason that it was coming to me. Apologies! . . . Regarding Section D, Brother Dudiak says:

"When the amperes are increased beyond 60, a loss of light results. The higher the amperage, the greater the loss, not because there is not an increase of light, but due to the fact that optical system is incapable of utilizing the increase of illumination. It must be emphatically stressed that any increase in amperage at the arc results in more illumination, but will the optical system utilize the increase—that is the problem."

On this point, T. Van Vaulkenburg says, "When the d.c. amperage is raised above 60, there is loss, and such loss increases steadily until the amperage reaches about 120. This is so because of the fact that, whereas the center of the condenser sends forward to the aperture an image of the light source, which at 60 amperes is just about large enough to fill the entire aperture. Above that current strength, it more than fills the aperture, hence there is waste.

"Every pin point of the collector lens sends forward similar images, but all of them, except that from the center, are out of center with the aperture, hence will have to be larger than the center spot to entirely cover the aperture opening, which necessarily results in loss from both the central zones and all other zones of the condenser.

"When the amperage has reached about 120, even the images from the outside condenser zones are large enough to cover the aperture, and those of all other zones very much more than cover it, so that there is very great light loss set up. Above about 120 amperes, no more light can be got through the projector aperture.

"Note: These figures will, of course, be somewhat altered when the new aperture, just approved, has been installed, but the principle remains the same."

A most excellent reply, Brother Van Vaulkenburg. Projectionists may themselves test this matter out by using metal plates containing pin-holes at different distances from center against the converging lens front surface—or—better yet, paint the front surface of a converging lens with white calcimine in which sufficient lampblack, or ordinary chimney soot, has been mixed to make it dark. Then, using a pin or knife point, make pin holes in this coating, one place at a time, projecting the light through each hole at varying amperages. You may get some surprises and learn considerable about the operation of a light source and condenser. The same stunt can be pulled with a reflector.

Columbia Buys Sturges Play as Third Under Percentage Plan

"Child of Manhattan," Preston Sturges' current dramatic play, has been secured by Columbia from the producer, Peggy Fears, for the new season. This is the third vehicle to be obtained by the company on its recently announced percentage arrangement which seeks to introduce in the industry the policy used in the legitimate theatre. Under this plan the stage producer, playwright, screen director or stars share in the profits of the picture. The other two deals made under this arrangement brought Wheeler and Woolsey as well as "Brief Moment" to the Columbia banner. Several other negotiations are now under way, it is said.

Photophone and Victor Chiefs Meet in New York on New Deal

Phil Goldstone, independent coast producer and financier of independent productions, conferred with executives of RCA in New York on Tuesday regarding the results of a Hollywood campaign to line up various independent units for Photophone recording. Present were E. A. Nicholson, vice-president and sales manager of RCA Victor; C. Lloyd Egner, manager of the recording department, and his assistant, W. A. Graham, who returned from a six weeks' stay at the studios working out the deal with Goldstone. E. O. Heyl, manager of the Photophone division of RCA Victor, was also present.

JENKINS' COLYUM

DEAR HERALD:

Through the courtesy of Miss Mildred Early, we have just received a copy of the Hollywood Herald and we note that the HERALD copies the following from "Judge" which has reference to Marie Dressler in "Emma": " . . . a mawkish romance called 'Emma' written by a Hollywood hack and played by an amiable old lady."

Perhaps the man who wrote that prefers bedroom and bathroom scenes.

Perhaps he prefers illicit scenes with other men's wives. Perhaps he is incapable of appreciating clean, wholesome entertainment. Most likely he is more familiar with the lewd, bawdy trash down on the East Side.

If censorship should ever become necessary, quite likely "Judge" will furnish the main incentive.

If the kidnappers would steal a child belonging to the Governor-General of Canada what do you suppose would happen? Do you think that as long as they stayed on this earth they would get away with it? You feed a bird dog meat and he can't scent a trail. They should keep "meat" away from the New York and New Jersey police force or turn the job over to the "North West Mounted" or the "Texas Rangers."

In ten years from today the arrogance of Al Capone will have turned to a knowledge of the fact that the rule of "The Survival of the Fittest" and "Justice" often travel different roads.

The Hollywood Herald makes use of this expression, "sic transit gloria." We don't know whether this is Yiddish, Wop or Swede, but we presume what they meant to say was that Gloria was sick in transit, and if that's the case it's just too doggone bad. We hope Gloria hasn't got neuritis.

Do you know how small an atom is? Well, it's so small that you can't imagine it. Scientists claim to be able to split an atom into electrons and protons, and when split, it gives off an energy equal to sixteen million volts. Scientists are going to keep monkeying with this stuff until some day they will blow up the whole works, you see if they don't. They should leave Nature alone. The Lord never intended that they should pry into his private business.

The Hays Title Committee has become very much exercised over the title to one of Paramount's pictures and are frowning a deep, dark frown which may have some effect. Who knows? The title in question is "Merrily We Go To Hell." Why, shame on your Committee. Why be so finicky? We have seen a lot worse titles than that. That title out in front of a theatre would make the inside of the house so dark that the janitor couldn't find the light switch. This raises the question, "Why is a title writer?"

Maybe the reason why we enjoyed "Polly of the Circus" so much is because we stood in the wings and saw them make some of the scenes. We had a nice visit with Clark Gable and Raymond Hatton but nobody seemed inclined to introduce us to Marion Davies. That's what a man gets for being so darned handsome, it arouses jealousy. If you enjoy seeing the picture as much as we did visiting with those two bozos, you should be pleased plenty good enough.

Let's see, who was it that claimed that courtroom scenes were drab, and insipid compared to bedroom scenes? Was it "Judge"? Maybe it was "Lady Godiva," for Tennyson says she was trying to make a hit with the boys.

It is reported that five pictures are now in production, all dealing with the inner life of Hollywood. There sir, Abner, that settles it. If they should portray the lowdown on Hollywood, what then? Echo answers, "What Then."

Albert Howson of the Warner Bros. staff is reported to have said in a speech, "The reputation of the industry should be the primary consideration of the industry's personnel." Well, well. This industry is something like twenty-five years old and that important fact has just soaked in. Great minds move slowly.

When a picture's premiere is a flop in New York they should rush it right out to the boys in the country so they could clean up with it. If it is a success, let 'em keep it. "Broadway Success" is a phrase of press agent coinage, which, when hammered down to brass tacks, really means the theatreman's pallbearers.

It isn't the fear of the penalty that deters criminals from committing crime, it is the fear of conviction. You do away with the fear of conviction and you've got anarchy. Between Nature and Congress there's a sorry outlook for this agricultural country. We are not only faced with another grasshopper menace, but the cutworms are taking a prominent hand in the destruction of crops.

An entomologist from the university of Lincoln made an examination of the soil and found fifty cutworms in a space of soil eight inches square. That's a lot of cutworms. You can figure out how many there would be in an acre yourself. There is one encouraging outlook, however. The fairways and greens are said to be in good shape and it looks like a good season for bass, and if Congress don't place the tax on malt too high, we ought to be able to worry through until huckleberry time.

Cut out the "Frankensteins" and "Freaks" and give us a few more "Emmas" and "Broken Lullabys" and then bring on your grasshoppers and cutworms and see if we care. What's a few hoppers and cutworms compared to neuritis anyhow?

VOICE OF THE INDUSTRY

A DIRECT BEARING

I NOTE WITH GREAT PLEASURE Your editorial headed, "And Tomorrow?" in your April 16 issue. I am enclosing a copy of an address given by President William Green of the American Federation of Labor, here in Salt Lake City, October 27, 1931, and would especially call your attention to the sub-heading, "Will Help Industry," which has a direct bearing upon the editorial in question. Mr. Green says:

> "When normal conditions come I wish that we might create wider opportunities for the enjoyment of leisure for working men and women that can come through the reduction of the number of days worked per week and the number of hours worked per day and leisure will help industry, because leisure is consumable. Leisure means the consumption and use of more goods and more things. I would like to ask the automobile manufacturers, in fact, every representative of a luxury industry, how they expect to market their goods if the masses of the people are denied the opportunity to enjoy them. How are fifty million men and women to enjoy the automobile if they are compelled to work six days per week? If they are granted more leisure they will buy more automobiles and that means an increase in automobile production. Every automobile agent, every man who owns a dollar of automobile stock, every one who owns the bonds issued by these automobile companies, we ought to have them standing right by me fighting for the five-day week and the six-hour day. Their allies ought to be the manufacturers of the radio, the owners of the motion picture theatres and all the places of amusement and amusement industries."

I believe that more such editorials should be written and you are at liberty to use any or all the material I am enclosing, in connection with any editorial you may wish to write in connection with this matter.

Again thanking you for your judgment, at this time, in touching upon this phase of our deplorable economic condition and with kindest personal regards.—GEO. A. YAGER, Business Manager, Motion Picture Projectionists, Local 250 of I. A. T. S. E. and M. P. M. O. of the U. S. & C., Salt Lake City, Utah.

AS TO THE SPECIAL

A SMALL TOWN EXHIBITOR BUYS A full block of pictures expecting that all the pictures that he contracts for will be at his service, upon furnishing the dates.

Then he wakes up to the fact that they have made two or three pictures that are sure box-office bets but these each and several pictures are not in his contract, and in order to play them he will have to mortgage his house to get his money back, what with guarantee and long percentage. This happens at a time when he needs them more than at any other time in his experience of twelve years, with business at the lowest ebb known in this business. Every exhibitor that I know of is at this time running behind every week, each month worse than the other.

More power to Brookhart although Mr. Quigley did not like his setup, but if his bill will remedy such practices as these it ought to be passed with a full majority.

Houses are closing because not able to make it go, and more will close unless conditions change materially soon.

The market will be more restricted than it has ever been this summer, for no one today is making a dollar in the small towns in this vicinity, and many will close to stop the losses.

There is only one bright spot in this kind of business and that is that this hard-boiled practice probably will catch up with them very soon, and the shoe will be on the other foot.

If I do not miss my guess by watching conditions get gradually worse, they will be glad to have them played at any price in order to get the run and the revenue.—A. E. HANCOCK, Manager, Columbia theatre, Columbia City, Ind.

Theatre Lighting In Churches Seen

Leaders of the Presbyterian church will hear how churches may profit from motion picture theatres, at their 144th general assembly in Denver May 24th to June 1. In the use of talking pictures and in the lighting of the auditorium, the church will do well to pattern after the motion picture, Rev. Hugh Paul Janes of Philadelphia will tell the assembly.

Churches eventually will adopt the lighting principles used in theatres of illuminating the center of interest and leaving the audience in semi-darkness, Reverend Janes, who is a member of the Presbyterian board of Christian education, predicts. "Semi-darkness stimulates a feeling of reverence and visual distractions are eliminated," he says. "Besides, people sing more enthusiastically in a dimly-lighted room." Many of the Presbyterian churches throughout the country, Reverend Janes believes, will in the near future use motion pictures with reproduced sound as an aid to worship to meet the trend of the times.

Powers Has 10 Films Ready; P. A. Conferring in England

Powers Pictures, recently formed by P. A. Powers, veteran industry figure, has 10 features available, with the release this month of "The Shadow Between." Ten others are in various stages of production. Powers is in England for conferences aiming at changes in production to combine the best features of American and British production.

Stories will be drawn chiefly from stage plays and widely read fiction authors, it is announced. Leading roles will be given to players with a definite following here and in England, according to Powers. In work are: Compton Mackenzie's "Carnival," "The Limping Man," by Will Scott; an adaptation of John Van Druten's play, "London Wall;" "The Fires of Fate," by A. Conan Doyle, and Frederick Lonsdale's "Maid of the Mountains."

Herbert Brenon to Direct New Picture for Columbia

Columbia has signed Anna May Wong for a role and Herbert Brenon to direct, "The Bitter Tea of General Yen," planned as a spectacular production. Irving Cummings, director, has been signed by the company to a long term contract.

R. C. Hill has been appointed Columbia branch manager in Salt Lake City. Hill was formerly connected with Warner and Tiffany in sales work.

Warner Making Six Westerns To Be Released Next Season

Warner will make a series of six western films, with production starting some time this month, as a part of the 1932-33 schedule. A prominent western star will be featured in the series.

Supporting casts are to be taken from the Warner-First National player ranks and from among free-lance western players. Elaborate treatment is planned for the features.

CHICAGO

Walter and Jack Osserman, district manager and exchange head at the local RKO office, are preparing to welcome the company's executives and sales representatives from all parts of the country in Chicago next Monday for the opening of the big national three-day RKO sales meeting. Gettleson of the company's home office publicity department will arrive here Friday to assist in completing preliminary details. A model of Radio City will be one of the interesting features.

One of the busiest chaps in town last week was Andy Sherrick, local publicity man for Universal. Not only did Sherrick have all the reporters and photogs out to welcome Carl Laemmle, but with the assistance of Walter Hyland and Ben Grimm he had the convention quarters in the Drake all decorated while the delegates were enjoying lunch.

L. V. Kuttnauer is still doing business along Film Row—now in the interests of the Equitable Life Insurance Company.

Plans of Mrs. Richard McClure for the operation of the better film council of the Illinois Federation of Women's Clubs are to be announced at an early meeting with exhibitors and distributors.

Herman Saperstein, brother of the local Allied president, has joined with Harry Lesserman in the management of the fountain and cigar stand in the Universal building.

The local Rialto seems less expansive and cheering since last week when the Roosevelt Theatre lights went out for an indefinite period. Balaban & Katz declare they do not have any special time in mind for reopening the house.

Daring Pathe News Cameraman "Shoots" New York Pier Blaze

A striking bit of newsreel intrepidity was recorded by Jim Pergola, Pathe News cameraman, at the disastrous Cunard pier fire in New York last week. Pergola climbed with his apparatus to the top of the adjoining pier, which was burning, and obtained a series of "well" shots, looking down into the blaze. Overcome by smoke, he was discovered after an hour by a fireman, was lowered, with his camera, and revived by police.

Pathe News also hired a blimp to photograph the fire from the air. A new concentrator microphone was used in the coverage of the Kentucky Derby last Saturday. A second microphone was placed beneath the radio stand, giving Pathe News the same description of the race that went out over the radio.

THE RELEASE CHART

Productions are listed according to the names of distributors in order that the exhibitor may have a short-cut towards such information as he may need, as well as information on pictures that are coming. Features which are finished or are in work, but to which release dates have not been assigned, are listed in "Coming Attractions." Running times are those supplied by the distributors. Where they vary, the change is probably due to local censorship deletions. Dates are 1931, unless otherwise specified.

WHAT DOES YOUR PUBLIC KNOW ABOUT RAW FILM?

NOTHING, perhaps. Yet, whether they're aware of it or not, people are profoundly influenced by the photographic quality which that film gives or does not give them on the screen. It may mean all the difference between a picture that goes its quiet, unprofitable way and one that becomes the talk of the town.

There's no need, these days, to run the risk of sacrificing photographic quality. Eastman Gray-backed Super-sensitive Negative, with its unmatched qualities and its never-failing uniformity, costs no more than other films, yet it helps substantially to head the picture for success. Wise the cameraman who uses it...lucky the exhibitor who runs prints made from it!

WONDER WHAT A THERMOMETER THINKS ABOUT!

(with Apologies)

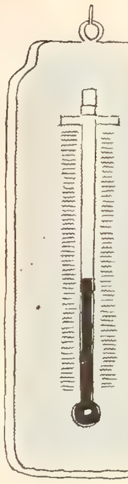
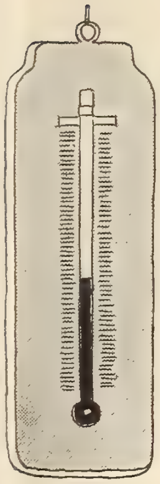
"Ha! Ha! The Boss is sure worried. I'm getting hot and he's getting cold. A little more of this nice spring weather and I'll be alone in this theatre!"



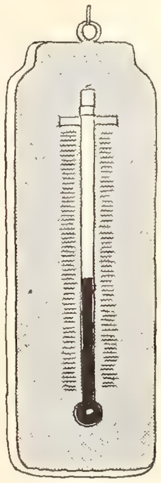
The old boy fooled me. He's playing 'LETTY LYNTON' this week. The weather doesn't seem to count when Joan Crawford's on the screen – but just wait!"

"What right has the Boss got to smile at this time of year? Last Spring and Summer he used to watch me like a hawk. Since he booked those Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer pictures he doesn't seem to notice me any more!"

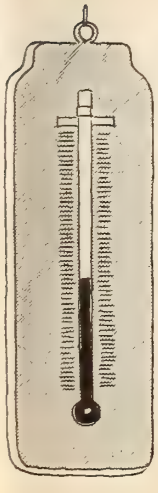


"Well, this can't go on all Spring and Summer! The lucky stiff is doing good business again this week with 'NIGHT COURT' but I'll get in my dirty work yet!"

"Gosh, I heard the porter talking about the theatre down the street that's been hit by this fine weather. The lucky thermometer down there gets plenty of attention. I bet!"



"Darn it, just when I thought I had the Boss on the run, he sticks up a sign saying Norma Shearer & Clark Gable are coming in 'Strange Interlude'. Fat chance for me!"



"They're running around in circles here talking about a picture called 'HUDDLE' starring Ramon Novarro, surprise hit of the year. The news of Dressler-Moran in 'PROSPERITY' has me nuts – I'm as useful here as a beauty spot on a colored dame!"

"That's adding insult to injury – in one day he turns on the cooling plant, chills me to the bone – and announces GRETA GARBO in 'As You Desire Me'. I sure feel low to-day."

I'm worried sick. I heard the Boss tell the porter to throw me out. No need for a thermometer in an M-G-M house. I can't even get a job in a hospital. They tell me I'm not the type!"

LESS WORK AND WHY

OBFUSCATED as we all are with the immediate problems of the next fifteen minutes, the really big important issues are lost in that same perspective which makes it impossible to see the forest because of the trees.

Just now this tremendously vital industry is full of fuss and feathers about a lot of details like "protection," "limitation of subsequent runs," "copyright violations," "block booking" and such like miscellaneous bolts and nuts and screws of the motion picture machine. They are mere trivia, shop talk and prattle when measured alongside the real problems of the industry.

The fact is that the motion picture industry is vastly larger, more important and more vitally interwoven into the affairs of humanity than its masters, meaning merely the current custodians of the art and industry, are aware. No man in the motion picture industry from Edison to Zilch has ever seen what it was or was going to be for the next five years.

Just now we are all worrying about tricks and trades and schemes and plans, from Broadway to Hollywood, aimed at solving the problems of the business. The sum total of them will help—help, that is, in about the same terms that the pterodactyl of fossiliferous fame helped aviation.

As has been stated in these pages once or twice before, the only trouble with the picture industry is the human race.

Here and there, usually dimly, often reluctantly, we are getting expressions that show that now and again the leaders of this industry and others are permitting themselves the dangerous adventure of thinking seriously about it.

For instance in Motion Picture Herald of April 16 we made editorial reference to an expression from Mr. Myron C. Taylor of the United States Steel Corporation indicating that as head of the most stupendous and impressive of expressions of the industrial mechanism, he felt that the working week was destined to be shorter, with increased leisure for consumption by the workers. We noted then that Mr. Henry Ford has often been recorded in equivalent notions.

In the issue of April 30, just to take care of two inches at the bottom of an editorial column, we were impertinent enough to make inquiry on our own account concerning the ridiculous procedure of some of the barons of commerce who prate of lower wages and longer working hours, thereby increasing the current over-production and diminution of buying power.

Then on May 14 along came a letter from Mr. George A. Yager, business manager of Motion Picture Projectionists Local No. 250 in Salt Lake City, declaring labor's approval of less work and more time to spend, and enclosing an excerpt from an address by Mr. William Green, president of the American Federation of Labor, calling for the six-hour day and the five-day week, saying that allies of the movement ought to include "the manufacturers of the radio, the owners of the motion picture palaces and places of amusement."

And now this week Mr. David Sarnoff of the Radio Corporation of America, and, through the coordinations of Westinghouse and General Electric, a spokesman for one of the mightiest of world industries, has made a telephone wired address to the RKO sales convention in Chicago saying thirty hours a week, according to the economists, ought to be enough work and declaring that "the march of the times is toward the greater liberation of the individual and the greater reliance on the machine. In the recent economic upheaval the machine contributed toward over-production and unemployment . . . the machine must be made to give regulated employment of shorter hours and greater opportunity for leisure."

If the motion picture industry can be made conscious of its part and place in the conquest and development of the machine, it can be an important contributor to a progress which must come before the screen can importantly prosper.

PUBLICITY 59 B.C.

WHAT with the weather and preoccupation with the tulip crop and other like important matters, we just now get around to recording that on April 21, the 2,685th birthday of Rome, the Journalist Club of that up and coming city unveiled a bust of the late Mr. Julius Caesar, honoring him as the first war correspondent and, by reason of his founding the Acta Diurna, as father of the Fourth Estate.

It is, to be sure, history that General Caesar, when he became Consul in 59 B.C. revolutionized politics in Rome by declaring for a wide open publicity policy for the proceedings of the previously secretive Senate, and caused the Acta Diurna —or The Daily Acts—to be published on big white boards posted in the Forum. Scribes copied the postings, and lo the daily press was born—and, of all things, a tabloid at that.

Personally we fear that what the great Consul really founded was the Congressional Record, which in its present incarnation lacks the snap and pith of the surviving specimen fragments* of Acta Diurna. The Roman journalists would have done quite as well to have honored that clever, but all too human, Mr. Mark Anthony, public relations counsel and publicity agent to the honored Consul. History has never adequately recorded Mr. Anthony's work in that job as the first great press agent. General Caesar's work as a war correspondent was so bad that it has been preserved as a text book by an educational system which holds that education must be made hard and unhappy. After Anthony got on the job Caesar's copy improved a lot.

The Acta published a deal about the arenas and the gladiators and it is evident that Mr. Anthony knew the amusement field and star values in exploitation even before Cleopatra showed him what she could do.

* Unhappily, even the fragments are possibly fakes, such being the curse upon the press agent even in the beginning. Scholars now say that the alleged remnants of the Acta, allegedly surviving, were written more than a thousand years later by Juan Luis Vives, a friend of Erasmus, and sometimes called "the father of modern psychology." Mr. Vives seems to have proved his contentions by history and wrote the history himself. Sweet are the uses of publicity.

TRADE-MARK RECOGNITION: A SURVEY

Above are reproductions of various nationally advertised trade-marks, as submitted in a survey conducted by the advertising agency, Newell-Emmett Company, Inc., through the courtesy of whom this survey is here cited. How many can you name? The correct answers are to be found on Page 32.

MANY are the trade-marks advertised lavishly to the American public today. What is their meaning in the merchandising of product? As an attempt to find at least a lead toward the answer to this question, the New York advertising agency, Newell-Emmett Company, Inc., conducted a survey in which 25 trade-marks were submitted in a canvass of "white collar" office workers, laborers, housewives and working women. (The trade-marks thus submitted are reproduced on this page.)

In this survey 2,238 men and women were personally interviewed over scattered sections of the country, with the majority, however, situated in the Eastern section of the United States. The names of the companies or products represented by these trade-marks, and the relative rankings of the advertised symbols according to the number of identifications, are given in this issue, as indicated elsewhere on this page.

Among those trade-marks which will prove familiar to readers of this publication, is that of Paramount Publix, the commercial symbol of which is the only one representative of the motion picture industry submitted in the survey. Despite the fact that it is generally considered that women form the greater portion of the adult patronage of the motion picture theatre, only 36.5 per cent of the women interviewed recognized the Paramount Publix trade-mark, while this symbol was identified by 52.7 per cent of the men questioned. Of the men, 54.9 per cent were of the so-called "white collar" class, while 42.2 per cent were laborers. On the other hand, more working women than housewives recognized the Paramount Publix trade-mark, over 40 per cent of those interviewed being of the former class, while only 18.5 per cent belong to the latter. Among both sexes, the greater portion identifying this symbol were of the younger generation—that is, of an age under 25 years.

Of the selected trade-marks submitted, that of the cleaning powder, "Old Dutch" cleanser, was recognized by the largest number of those interviewed. Over 93 per cent of the 2,238 men and women queried identified this symbol—more than 91 per cent of the men, and over 97 per cent of the women. Another household product, "Maxwell House" coffee, reversed this order. The trade-mark of this product, which ranked second in the survey, was identified by 91.5 per cent of the men interviewed, and by 90.3 per cent of the women. The trade-mark the least known among those submitted was that of Chase brass, the symbol of this product being recognized by only 7.9 per cent of the persons interviewed—

INDUSTRY ANALYZES LICHTMAN AND FEIST "CLASS" SALES PLANS

Storm of Discussion Descends in Wake of Herald Publication of Revolutionary Proposals; Condemnation Greatest Among Independents; Every Type of Theatre Represented in Nation-Wide Response

Revolutionary changes in the structure of motion picture distribution and exhibition, as proposed in plans announced last week by Al Lichtman of United Artists and by Felix Feist of Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer, brought forth a storm of discussion this week from theatre owners of the country and from exhibitor leaders who represent some few thousands of showmen. Although none denied that revisions of some nature are needed in the present setup of distribution, and would be acceptable, many important operators, principally independents, voiced their complete lack of sympathy for and vigorous denunciation of the propositions which were authored by Lichtman and Feist. A few independents joined with many circuit operators and managers in commending the possibilities offered by either one or both of the plans.

Lichtman's proposal would re-classify theatres and pictures into two distinct quality groups: A and B, while Feist suggested that, as one of many schemes now being considered by his company, subsequent runs would be ignored completely in order to enhance box offices of certain designated "qualified" theatres by concentrating merchandising efforts and public patronage at houses selected.

Basically, Lichtman's suggestion would consolidate the present distributing plants into one system with a single exchange center in each city to handle the physical distribution for all concerned. It takes care of rentals, protection and other phases of operation by splitting up the nation's theatres into A and B groups, further classifying all product as either A or B quality and then making available A pictures only to A theatres and B films to houses of the B classification. Rentals on A pictures would be based on an average minimum admission charge of 50 cents, and for the B group on approximately half that amount, or even less. An advertising campaign of nationwide proportions would be used to educate the public to the significance of the plan.

Comment from the field follows:

"PUBLIC HAS RIGHT TO SELECT . . ."

FRED WEHRENBERG, President, Motion Picture Theatre Owners of St. Louis, Eastern Missouri and Southern Illinois, and Chairman of the Board of MPTO of America

The plan of distribution outlined by Felix Feist for exclusive showings is not sound from a business standpoint. It seems to reverse the accepted methods of business to secure as wide a distribution of product as possible, and thereby reducing overhead, to restricting distribution and automatically increasing overhead.

Another objection and perhaps the most serious one, is that it does not take into consideration those who support our theatres, namely the public. The public has the inherent right to select the theatre which it desires to patronize and we cannot deny them that right.

We dare not attempt to classify the public. The appeal of the motion picture business is that it is the great commoner of the public and any attempt to destroy this appeal is tantamount to inviting destruction of our industry. Let us seek to reduce distribution costs, but not at the expense of the public.

Another great objection is that it would increase the power of the circuits who would have an advantage over the independents, by being able to buy exclusive before it is even offered to independents, and if this were done it would drive thousands out of business.

HARD ON SUBSEQUENTS . . .

A. JULIAN BRYLAWSKI, President, Motion Picture Theatre Owners of District of Columbia

I have been aware for some time of the contemplated change in distribution methods as outlined in the plans recently announced by Metro and U. A. and have given them much thought.

I must admit that one's views on this subject will, of necessity, be colored entirely by personal considerations. It makes much difference "Whose bull is gored."

The smaller theatres must needs protest loud and long, but I think the larger theatres especially in competitive situations will look with favor on the plan.

In a town of 30,000, my own first-run theatre has been compelled to reduce prices (without greatly increased revenue) nearly 50 per cent to meet subsequent 10 and 15-cent competition. In that and similar spots we would gladly absorb second-run film rentals to secure "exclusive" runs and restore original box office scales, thus playing on percentage as we do, give and receive more from playing time.

I am afraid, however, that the smaller and subsequent runs will find the inevitable shrinkage of production an unsurmountable obstacle to continued operation.

"PURE PSEUDO BARRAGE . . ."

EDWARD G. LEVY, Executive Secretary, Motion Picture Theatre Owners of Connecticut

I view with alarm United Artists' pronouncement of A and B feature distribution and MGM's contemplated exclusive zone bookings. The stern-father-hurts-me-more-than-it-does-you attitude of Mr. Lichtman and Mr. Feist is of course pure pseudo-barrage and entirely fails to conceal the fact that these gentlemen hope their companies will profit financially by the move. Necessity is the mother of invention and doubtless some panacea will be evolved to cure the subsequent runs ills; but in the interim, I visualize:

1. Cut-throat competition among the first-runs in key cities.
2. Unprecedented prosperity for the independent producers.
3. An arduous and profitless noble

¶ "BOTH INCREASE PROTECTION"

experiment for United Artists, MGM and any one else who falls in line.

4. Another death-blow to the nine lives of the subsequent-run house.

Neighborhoods have always justified their existence by building up patronage for de luxers—under the proposed changes, with inferior product, this natural and gratifying condition will probably cease to exist.

"SILLY . . ."

RAY MOON, General Manager, Cooperative Theatre Service Corporation, Detroit

I'm surprised that men with such ability and keen minds should suggest anything so silly. Patrons in the Class B houses demand Class A pictures and if the picture is a hit in a first run house it will be a hit in the subsequent run, except in very few instances.

"BOTH SUBTERFUGES . . ."

JOSEPH M. SEIDER, Independent New York Theatre Owner

The plans of Mr. Al Lichtman and Mr. Felix Feist are both subterfuges. They both are identical in purpose, to wit: Increasing the length of protection by the circuits over individual theatres.

If permitted to grow, these two plans will result in the complete annihilation of the subsequent run theatres.

In the recent past, producing companies which also own theatres, have come to the realization that the individual-owned theatres are being better managed than the circuit-operated theatres.

Driven into a panicky state of mind by current business conditions, the large circuits have come to the conclusion that they desire longer protection. In order to accomplish this they now cause their producing affiliates to bring this threat with the hope that the theatre owners will compromise and accept, as the lesser of two evils, a longer protection system in favor of the circuits instead of either of the two proposed plans.

It is just another step in the wrong direction.

"THE SALVATION . . ."

JOSEPH LUCKETT, Empire Theatre, San Antonio, Texas

It is the salvation of both the distribution and production end of the industry. I am for the new distribution plans 100 per cent.

"A SMOKE SCREEN . . ."

H. M. RICHEY, General Manager, Allied Theatre Owners of Michigan, Detroit

If United Artists and Metro go through with their idea of only selling their good pictures to Class A houses, either those houses will remain dark a part of the time or they will have to continue to do what they have been doing in Mr. Lichtman's own words:—running 10 cent pictures for 50 cents.

I don't believe that overnight Mr. Lichtman or Felix Feist has conceived the formula for Class A pictures. Certainly neither company's percentage of Class A pictures during the past few years would indicate that they had. Both companies had a few pictures that might stand up under the plan but the public won't be kidded into thinking a picture is Class A if it isn't, and if the Class A houses are to remain Class A they must have at least 52 Class A pictures a year, and I would like to have some bright boy speak right up now and pick out 52 Class A pictures from all the companies combined this year.

If all the companies cannot do it I seriously doubt if two or three companies can.

Nor do I think the subsequent run exhibitor has anything to worry about. The whole discussion looks to me like a well conceived smoke screen and barrage that is being laid down to scare the subsequent run exhibitor into kicking into the kitty a little more "dough" this year on the promise that if he is a good boy Al and Felix might change their minds and let him have some of these super, gigantic, extra-special specials they have up their sleeve.

"GRAND HOTEL"—ROADSHOW

The National theatre in Wilmington, Va., a Wilmer & Vincent house, is featuring in its current advertising on the roadshowing of "Grand Hotel," the phrase, "This picture will not be shown in any other theatre in Richmond this season."

MGM recommends use of this phrase in "Grand Hotel" advertising during the picture's roadshowing, assuring roadshow houses that the picture will not be released before September, and possibly later in some localities.

But I don't think "Mr. Subsequent Run" will fall for it.

If the idea of high admission prices is so good, why don't United Artists road show more of their super-supers, grant the usual road show protection which is generally as long as they want to make it, and make money. The experience with road shows has not been exactly a good one.

I wonder if Mr. Lichtman or Mr. Feist, if they really were serious about this thing, think that a subsequent run exhibitor would be sap enough to support this kind of a policy by buying the Class B pictures, thereby automatically saying to their public "you can see the inferior pictures here, naturally for less because they are not worth as much as the Class A productions." Do they for a moment think that 5,000 theatres are automatically going to advertise to the world that their investments are worthless, that their brand of entertainment is just ordinary. You will pardon me if I express a slight doubt.

Mr. Lichtman's statement says, and is quite contradictory, that the Class B pictures wouldn't be so very inferior to the Class A pictures and on that statement wrecks his own brain child. Unless these Class A pictures he has up his sleeve are outstanding enough to justify a longer run, on some other basis than that of artificial protection, they will suffer in comparison with the slightly inferior Class B so that if the plan ever went into effect we might be treated with the spectacle of having Class B pictures licking hell out of Class A—a most embarrassing situation for the Class A house and the unreasonable public might awaken to the realization that all the new plan had done was to make their amusement cost more for the same type of amusement.

An analysis of Metro's Class A pictures shows that during last year, according to reports from exhibitors, by stretching things to the maximum they might have made six or seven—not more than 10—of their 48 that might be classed as A pictures. I wonder what is going to happen to their 38 if they don't have the ten to use as bait.

"ELIMINATE SUBSEQUENTS . . ."

WALTER VINCENT, Wilmer & Vincent Corporation, and Chairman, "MGM Protest Committee" of Exhibitors

If motion picture producers and owners of first-run deluxe motion picture theatres are to conduct a profitable business, there can be no question but that subsequent-runs must be eliminated in all small and medim size cities. If producers do not make money there won't be any pictures for anybody, so that seems to cover the entire situation.

"NOT FEASIBLE . . ."

JOHN A. SCHWALM, Pioneer Ohio Exhibitor

I do not consider the plan at all feasible. Division of pictures as suggested is bound to cause dissension among exhibitors and patrons, especially on the Class B list, because where a patron will pay 25 cents for the second run of a big picture, he will not be inclined to pay this for a Class B picture which he is virtually told in advance is not a topnotcher, nor comparable with the Class A production. Moreover, the plan will entail production problems which will be difficult, if not impossible to overcome. I believe the producers will cheat themselves out of at least 40 per cent of their production because it seems incredible that enough Class B screen names of sufficient importance will be constantly available to constitute a continued draw at the Class B houses even at the lower scale, especially when the public has been accustomed to seeing the outstanding stars and stories at the same admission, even though they have to wait for quite a while after national release date. Personally, I think the plan is all wet.

"BOON TO INDUSTRY . . ."

EDWARD M. FAY, Theatre Operator of Providence

Any evolutionary plan of distribution sponsored by MGM and United Artists undoubtedly will be a boon to the industry as a whole.

"A BITTER SUBJECT . . ."

F. M. A. LITCHARD, Theatre Operator of Franklin, Massachusetts

The Lichtman plan might apply to larger cities, but it has not considered the smaller cities and the larger towns. It does not consider varying territorial price scales. The plan is most discriminating regarding the classification of theatres, making it open to governmental interference. Classifying pictures is a bitter subject. The plan modified might have merit.

"MOVE IN RIGHT DIRECTION . . ."

ELMER H. BRIENT, Manager, Loew's Theatre, Richmond, Virginia

It is a definite move in the right direction. Atlanta, Georgia, has been successful with it. As for results, locations will figure largely in the proposed change, with better pictures in the best places. A great deal depends on patronage. I think theatres would get more of a turn-over by it.

"GREAT FOR THE INDUSTRY . . ."

SAM WASHNANSKI, Bijou Theatre, Detroit

Class A pictures for Class A houses and Class B pictures for Class B theatres is a possible solution to the problem. My patrons like action and plenty of it. They are not interested in social pictures in which the dialogue is completely over their head. No matter what records may be made by the first runs on the sophisticated problem play, my grosses show a sharp decline when such pictures play my house.

¶ "HEARTILY IN FAVOR OF SCHEME"

Pictures made definitely for the Class B house with the family and working man tastes in mind would be a great thing for this industry.

"LOOK GOOD ON 'PAPER,' BUT . . ."

HENRY LAZARUS, Secretary-Treasurer, Allied Theatre Owners of Louisiana, and an Exhibitor

After looking over and digesting the plans of both Mr. Lichtman and Mr. Feist, I am compelled to say in all truth that I do not think them feasible for New Orleans.

Mr. Lichtman would class houses into an A and B group. Presumably the A houses would be the quality ones, while the B would handle the pictures made for the mass. I don't understand how any pictures made exclusively on the basis of quality could hold forth in some of the palaces which at present get the first runs and which, because of their locations and the prices they charge, would be, assumably, A houses. These houses, with their large seating have to cater to ALL tastes and strictly quality pictures in such houses would be disastrous.

On the other hand, many houses which because of their size and the prices they charge automatically fall into the B class, have a family audience of cultured people. Is it fair to force on them a program of pictures CONSCIOUSLY made for what certain superior-minded people in Hollywood would consider the "public?" Isn't there a rather snooty attitude existing in film circles now about the public? Don't they consider box office something which appeals mostly to people with little or no artistic perception?

On these grounds I don't believe Mr. Lichtman's plan is feasible. His idea of a central booking office and advertising staff looks feasible from the economical viewpoint, but it savors too much of monopoly to be popular with the independents, who have a feeling there is altogether too much monopoly and czarism in the business now as it is.

For Mr. Feist's plan I can say still less. He has no thought at all for houses such as the ones I operate. With an attitude that is characteristic of M-G-M sales policies, he would distribute his pictures to certain houses exclusively and cut out the subsequent run. This might be profitable to M-G-M on paper, but I doubt if in fact it would work a situation such as New Orleans. And where would the subsequent run houses be?

"GOOD PHYSIC" NEEDED . . .

PETE WOOD, Business Manager, Motion Picture Theatre Owners of Ohio

A revolutionary change of this nature demands the sober thought and consideration of the entire industry. I appreciate that conditions call for some radical changes in the operation of this industry, but the problem is one for the real brains (if any) of the industry to work out—not the Pete Wood's who live west of the Hudson River.

Perhaps a good physic to flush away exorbitant salaries, excess production, unnecessary seats, top-heavy organizations and inefficient personnel might cure some of the bellyaches.

"TWO LITTLE WORDS . . ."

I have read the plans thoroughly and my opinion is contained in the following two words: "Aw, Nuts!"

M P T O TALKS ON PLAYDATES

Resolutions opposing the designation by distributors of specific playdates for pictures and condemning rulings requiring the return of used advertising accessories, were passed unanimously by members of the MPTO of St. Louis, Eastern Missouri and Southern Illinois, at a Pre-Buying Season conference at St. Louis.

While the MGM sales policy figured most prominently in the playdate discussions, members said that the resolution was not directed solely at that company's policy, but at any and all attempts to arbitrarily control playdates. The meeting was attended by several managers of St. Louis film exchanges.

"TOUGH . . ."

JACK MILLER, President, Chicago Exhibitors' Association

The impression I draw from the Lichtman plan is that it is going to be awfully tough on the small exhibitor.

"DECREASE BUSINESS . . ."

MORRIS LOWENSTEIN, Majestic Theatre, Oklahoma City

Such a move would be unfair to the B class public, who cannot afford a higher admission price, yet appreciate a good Class A film. The B houses must pay in proportion to their intake, and B pictures, if greatly inferior to A class films, under the new plan would cause a great decrease in business for B houses, who have a trade in a large part from a public demanding the A pictures at a reduced price.

"FAVORS SCHEME . . ."

JOHN F. SCHOEPPEL, Warners' Midwest Theatre, Oklahoma City

Heartily in favor of the scheme. It will take some time and a large amount of advertising to put it across in educating the public to the superior quality of A pictures and in pulling in those people who usually wait until a subsequent-run to see an A picture.

"CENTRAL AGENCY . . ."

M. J. O'TOOLE, Secretary, Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America

Those directly interested in the work of distributing pictures are of course best able to judge what the actual cost of distribution is. But one experience of officers of the Motion Picture Theatres Owners of America had, a few years ago, convinced all concerned that the cost was too high and that radical re-adjustments were necessary.

This involved the distribution of an organization reel called "The Spice of Life," produced for us by the Literary Digest. The high character of the national magazine involved and its allied publications guaranteed the excellence of this weekly reel.

The writer and other officers canvassed different distributing companies. The lowest price was 47 per cent of the receipts of the reel. Some exceeded 50 per cent. A discussion of the matter led to explanations to the effect that easy distribution in well populated areas had to pay for costly distribution in the wide open spaces.

There may have been some disposition to "squeeze" out this organization film weekly, but this was denied. Its advantage to the whole industry was even agreed to as it would be available for good-will, taxation, censorship and other forms of propaganda which could not enter the regular newsreels. At any event, we agreed that the distributors consulted were telling the truth.

Then a distribution system was suggested by some of the national officers which involved zoning the cost to enable the more favorably situated areas to obtain proper advantage. It was also suggested that a single distribution agency be agreed upon to be a "common carrier" within the industry and to operate as mutually as possible.

The physical distribution now is paid for by the exhibitor. He pays for the stamps on the can when he gets it from the exchange, and when he re-ships it pays again until it finally gets back to the exchange.

The distribution cost generally involves selling expense, repairing, etc. It may also include the cost of the positive prints, although our national organization agreed to furnish these making the cost quoted here outside of that item.

There is no trick about distribution. The average exhibitor is better able to tell what HE wants than the film salesman is able to tell HIM. We can simplify that costly, cluttered up system and reduce it to a plain, matter-of-fact, business bargaining. I am discussing distribution, not company sales plans. In the organization reel we had ready for distribution we agreed to supply prints, relieve the distributor of all sales exertion by having theatre owners book with us for the weekly reel, and yet they said the distribution cost would be between 47 and 50 per cent.

A central distribution agency like the American Express Company could be utilized. We could even construct our own distribution agency within the industry, mutualize it and make it a "common carrier" for our own use. Why pay for costly overlapping when one agency will do the real work?

Then let the sales policy be what it may. It will have to be sensible and acceptable and then it will succeed.

"SHORTSIGHTED, UNFAIR . . ."

CHARLES R. METZGER, Theatre Attorney, General Manager of Associated Theatre Owners of Indiana, Teacher at Indiana University

Concerning the so-called exclusive runs advocated by Messrs. Al Lichtman and Felix Feist, I have interviewed numerous exhibitors and get the following general reaction to the plan:

First, time is the real essence in the exhibition of motion pictures. The larger theatres, for the reason that they are reputed to pay higher rentals (although in some cases it has been shown that subsequent-runs have actually paid more than the first-runs have paid) have always enjoyed protection of varying lengths. In each city there are numerous people who are willing to pay more for admissions for the privilege of seeing a picture when it is first released; also for the deluxe surroundings, furnishings, and service that the first-run theatres are able to offer. At a later date, the same subjects can be shown in subsequent-runs at a lower admission price, the comforts and service of the first-run theatres are lacking, and the admission prices are less for these reasons. Most exhibitors feel that a minimum of protection is all that the first-run theatres should ask or expect over the subsequent-runs and certainly not exclusive privileges on pictures.

Second, in times when the country was generally prosperous both the first-run and the subsequent-run theatres enjoyed good business, but it is a fact that in periods of general prosperity the first-run theatres enjoy more than their full and proportionate share of the business since people do not object to the higher admission prices, while in periods of depression the cheaper priced theatres do slightly better due to the fact that people cannot afford the higher admission prices. In periods of depression the first-run theatres have often sought additional protection to add to their normal advantage over the subsequent-runs, but merely giving them exclusive privileges in a particular territory will not bring them additional business from the masses who cannot afford high-priced entertainment.

Third, it should never be forgotten that this whole industry made its greatest strides and progress when it operated modestly and made a price and subject appeal to the masses. It was from the profits made from the showing of films in ordinary theatres that many of the deluxe theatres were built to compete with former customers in the modest theatres. The necessity of charging higher admission prices in the deluxe theatres did much to alienate the old popular support that the industry enjoyed in its earlier days.

Fourth, if the distributors are going to pick out the very few pictures that are worth while, there will be nothing worth showing for the subsequent-runs which already are suffering from trying to put over unpopular and inferior product. It has also been generally stated by distributor leaders that their costs are recovered from the first-run theatres, but that their profits were always made from the subsequent-runs in the cities and the small-town theatres.

Fifth, if the industry is to become so exclusive as indicated in the present proposal, why not have only one showing in each state? Or only show such ritzy product in Los Angeles, Chicago and New York? Or why not have the studios make product exclusively for New York showings so that only wealthy citizens can afford to travel to New York to see these subjects. Or perhaps, better still, just have the actors and actresses appear on the stage in New York and not bother with the filming of the product at all? The possibilities of savings in "print cost" appear limitless in carrying this proposal to its logical conclusion. Since when has this industry become so exclusive?

Sixth, there are two ways of marketing any product—either high prices with limited sales or medium prices with a large volume of sales. This industry made its greatest progress and has always prided itself on its mass appeal and large volume of business done. The proposals of Messrs. Lichtman and Feist are in complete opposition to the methods which made the industry successful.

Seventh, Messrs. Lichtman and Feist should remember that it is in the lesser priced subsequent-runs that future patrons are developed for the motion picture theatres of this country. The youngsters who attend the neighborhood and small-town theatres as children are the later adult patrons of the deluxe theatres.

Eighth, the matter of high-priced production which demands this new exclusive set-up. Surely no experienced or informed person in this industry in any connection will try to argue that a picture has to be very expensive to have a wide and popular appeal.

The general attitude that we have been able to secure about the whole proposition is that the so-called exclusive showing plan is short-sighted, unfair, and that it violates every economic and equitable principle in the industry, but that it is rather typical of the ill-considered, ill-advised, and panicky plans that are advocated from time to time in this industry by certain groups that lack and fail to develop a long-time and far-sighted view about the industry.

"COULD OPERATE . . ."

JAMES COSTON, Charge of Warner Theatres, Chicago

My strictly personal reaction after reading something of the Lichtman plan is that it would no doubt effect certain economies. I believe it could be operated in smaller towns and perhaps even in some key cities, but it appears that it would be difficult to work in the large cities of the country.

"WANTS TO WRITE BOOK . . ."

FLOYD BROCKELL, Midwest Theatre Circuit, Chicago

The Lichtman idea opens a discussion on a question that is obviously tied in with many questions of fair and equitable practices in the industry. I have given Mr. Lichtman's ideas much thought, but after giving consideration to all that might be said on the subject, I would need the major part of at least one issue of the HERALD to give voice to my reactions.

"VARIETY PROGRAMS . . ."

WILLIAM EDDY, Owner of Theatres at Mt. Ayr and Indianola, Iowa

I am pleased with Lichtman plan as working toward a fair zoning. At Indianola, 16 miles from Des Moines, I used to please patrons occasionally with first runs, but this year I must wait 60 to 90 days, while at Mt. Ayr, 90 miles from Des Moines, where it is no advantage to me, I can get pictures sooner. Any plan must include variety in the program.

"NEW STAR VALUES . . ."

HARRY HIERSTEINER, Family Theatre, Des Moines

New star values can be built up. I can even imagine two versions of the same story with a high-priced cast from the same studio.

"DOUBTLESS COMING . . ."

FRANK RUBEL, Booker, Finkelstein's 13 Iowa Theatres, Des Moines

The central distribution office doubtless is coming, but there is a question whether classes of pictures and theatres can be so clearly marked.

"APPRECIATION . . ."

J. W. DENMAN, Treasurer, 22 Central States Theatres, Des Moines

We appreciate the point of view which considers the question of the small exhibitor, as well as the million-dollar one.

"SUBSIDIZE! . . ."

S. A. SELIG, Gem Theatre, Chicago

Forty per cent, at least, of the producer's revenue comes from the small theatres. It looks like an attempt to subsidize the small houses. I am interested in how it would affect me.

"INCREASED PRODUCT . . ."

GEORGE HENGER, Zone Manager, Warner Theatres, Oklahoma City

The suburb and subsequent-run houses on any circuit would have to have product from some source which would probably mean the increased output of Class B pictures from the producers if second-run houses were deprived of subsequent A pictures.

"UNPROFITABLE . . ."

H. J. GRIFFITH, Griffith Brothers Circuit, Oklahoma City

It would be an unprofitable scheme for the smaller towns in that top prices are hardly ever beyond 35 cents and the public cannot as a rule afford more, yet their houses are strictly A.

"HURT 'B' BUSINESS . . ."

J. R. STRIBLING, Rialto Theatre, Oklahoma City

It would lop B houses' business considerably because the public would shy at pictures that never play the A houses.

"SEEKS SOLUTION . . ."

FRED MEYER, President, Motion Picture Theatre Owners of Wisconsin and Upper Michigan

So much may be said pro and con on the Lichtman plan that I would feel reluctant to voice any personal or official opinion until I know considerably more than has appeared in print up to the present time.

I have no doubt but that the suggestion made will be thoroughly discussed at our convention next month. If, between now and then, the distributors would find it possible to work out some reasonable uniform zoning plan, one that will not subject them or the participants to investigation—if that could be done, I am sure it would automatically take care of the double feature evil and all others which have placed this industry in the condition we are in today.

"WOULD CLOSE 25% . . ."

NATHAN SALMON, President, New Mexico Theatre Owners Association

Who could determine whether or not a picture is Class A or Class B other than the public, and after they have seen the picture, what advantage would there be in classing same?

Are they going to force such a plan whereby the poor or laboring class could not afford to see a good picture but would have to be satisfied in seeing only cheap and inferior pictures?

Who could definitely state as to which theatre is a Class A house and which a Class B if two competitive theatres in the same town are equivalent?

Such a plan would close more than 25% of the theatres.

Why do they always work on plans that mean more to the distributor and less to the exhibitor? Would it not be better to take the exhibitor in mind, for after all he is the one who has made it possible for the distributor?

Millions of dollars are invested in theatres owned by independent exhibitors. Would it be wise to close these, for certainly the plan as formed by Lichtman runs only to chains owned by the distributors?

Why jeopardize one of the leading industries of the nation? You need the local exhibitors. They are the back-bone of your legislation in their respective communities. Bear them in mind the same time you do the large chain-owned theatres.

¶ "DO NOT FEEL IT IS PRACTICAL"

"ADVANTAGES AND . . ."

MORRIS A. MECHANIC, New Theatre, Baltimore

This has its advantages and disadvantages, but it does not seem practical nor feasible that the producers can lose the revenue from subsequent runs. Now to counteract that it is possible that they may want to freeze out the smaller houses to get all the revenue for the big houses they control. In other words, they may not care whether they bankrupt the small houses, but they do care about the big houses because the distributors own many of them.

It is a question as to which method will mean the most money for them and whether they can make more money in the large houses by an elimination of the subsequent runs. If they can prove they can get along without the smaller theatres they will not even bother with them.

"SUBSEQUENTS GIVE REAL PROFIT . . ."

CHARLES CLARKE, Manager, Warners' Metropolitan Theatre, Baltimore

I think the producers will find the neighborhood or subsequent run houses are turning in a profit far in excess than the downtown houses can do even though they would be loaded to capacity for the full length of the time they are open, taking into consideration the property investment and the amount of overhead. Of course this may not hold good in every town, but take the Durkee theatres here for instance. I think they will find those theatres will turn in a profit for the producers that they could never hope to realize just from downtown showings. Put in a few words, the subsequent or neighborhood houses give the producers the real profit on their investment.

"MUST PLAY FAIR . . ."

FRED DOLLE, Fourth Avenue Amusement Company, Louisville

After reading the article carefully and considering the problem from various viewpoints, I do not feel that it is practical. It may be sound theoretically, but the second run, or Class A and B houses are entitled to film. Their business has been built on the promise of product. The thought that independents could fill their requirements is not sound, in that they could not pay prices that would enable independents to produce pictures for their use. It would aid the first run house in attendance, but the producer would have to get a higher price from the first run, and the latter couldn't stand the "gaff."

The first run house needs protection against 30- to 42-day subsequent runs, or less. I favor from 90 days to six months. If the consumer knew that he could not see a picture second or third run soon, they would not wait, but would crowd in for the first run. This would give the first run house ample protection, and fully solve the problem. After all the producers must play fair with the exhibitors. Any program that would break the Class B and C owners, would seriously affect the producers.

"CIRCULATION . . ."

THOMAS D. GOLDBERG, Owner of Walbrook and Harford Theatres, Baltimore

The motion picture industry is a mass business instead of a class business and producers and distributors should guide their activities accordingly. In my judgment, as far as the first-run subsequent houses are concerned, I don't think it practical. The plan as outlined I do not think is practical nor can it be worked out in a practical fashion as far as selling to first run residential houses. I don't think it would be practically profitable for producers. No producer can exist with a limited amount of circulation. Absolutely not! Producers, in order to have profitable business on their pictures must have circulation, that's all!

They are in the same position as a newspaper. If it went out and said it was going to sell a certain number of papers to a certain class of people and a certain number of papers to another class of people, the paper couldn't exist, because there aren't enough classes to be divided among to give the paper results. They must have circulation in order to exist. When they make exclusive sales, they curtail their production and distribution and therefore cut their revenue accordingly.

They may have to do something about distribution but that isn't the way to do it. The plan would not be practically possible for either the producer or the exhibitor. In the first place the price would be so high that they would demand from the exhibitor that it would be impossible to make any money.

ROADSHOWED FOUR DAYS

After playing four days at $1.50 top at the Princess theatre in Akron, Ohio, the roadhrow engagement of "Grand Hotel" was brought to a close in that city. The established admission price at the Princess has been 15 cents.

---

"RIDICULOUS! . . ."

RENE BRUNET, Imperial, New Orleans

Ridiculous! It would eliminate them (subsequent runs) altogether. Instead of trying for better pictures, their minds (distributors') are in a different channel.

"NO NEED TO WORRY . . ."

HARRY SWITOW, Switow Amusement Company, Louisville

I don't believe that we need worry over any such radical departure. The producers are in no position to force any such issue as that at this time, as it would reduce earnings of their films, and the first run houses could not pay more than they are now paying, and if they lost revenue from second or third runs, they would be up against it. Again, you would never get all of the larger producers to agree to any such plan. I feel that most of the first run prospects see the films first-run anyway. Rather than pay an extra price they would see a cheaper picture. I doubt whether it would materially increase attendance for first run.

"WOULDN'T AFFECT B PRODUCT . . ."

HUGH C. ANDREWS, Lyceum Theatre, Minneapolis

The show business is built on the psychology of shutting some people out to make them all want to get in and that is what an exclusive run would do. I don't believe it would affect the merit of the Class B product at all, unless it made it better. It might put some pep into some of the secondary companies that are now trying to make grand super-spectacles.

"SPLENDID" FOR PRODUCERS . . .

L. M. GARMAN, Pantages Theatre, Kansas City

It is a splendid idea from the producers' standpoint. Certainly first runs should be assured freedom from cut-throat subsequent run competition. The innovations will result in much good if Class A theatres will get first-class product; but if the product will be only of program proportions, the plan will fail. If the new system will be practical as a whole remains to be seen. The classification method will bring back vaudeville to Class B houses and may well herald the return of first-class exclusively vaudeville theatres. A continuous supply of box office pictures will build steady patronage for Class A houses.

"BENEFIT DE LUXE" . . .

R. R. BIECHELE, Osage Theatre, Kansas City, Kansas, and formerly Regional Vice-President MPTOA

The industry has avowedly been striving to educate the masses to an appreciation of the motion picture, and to elevate and inspire them. If the proposed systems were in effect, those unable to afford the price of a seat at a de luxe Class A theatre would be denied the privilege of the message of the screen and of seeing worth while pictures. The plans would place a premium on a patron's ability to pay for that which it has been our announced intention to give him. But I can see where the reforms advanced would benefit deluxe runs in certain situations.

"WILL STABILIZE" . . .

GLEN W. DICKINSON, President, Dickinson Theatres, Inc.

The exclusive run plan will stabilize the industry. As far as individual cities are concerned, it is the only feasible system. But if it will involve a system of zoning whereby small towns will be discriminated against in favor of larger nearby situations, it will kill off the little fellow that is striving hard for existence. Small towns certainly would protest if their population were attracted to larger cities given exclusive run of the best pictures. Their Chambers of Commerce would not stand for it.

"NOT PRACTICAL" . . .

J. LAWRENCE SCHANBERGER, Keith's Theatre, Baltimore

I don't think it is very practical. Each picture usually gets about one-third of its investment back from its first runs and two-thirds from the subsequent runs, in my opinion. Some years ago, prices were about half of what they are now, especially for houses of the type of Keith's, but I can't buy pictures like that any more; the prices now are very high.

"IN FAVOR" . . .

HERMAN C. WEINBERG, Europa Theatre (267-seat foreign film house), Baltimore

I'm in favor of it for the same reason that a legitimate theatre, when it puts on a good play, runs from two to three months at about $2 top price, without any fear of subsequent runs. For that reason, good pictures can also be shown under the same policy at first run houses.

Briefly, if a picture is shown to the public in a first run house and the public knows that it will not be shown subsequently for a smaller price they will all flock to the first-run house to see it. It works on the same plan as a theatrical road engagement. People know they will not be able to see the production for less so they attend the house where it is first presented.

"A HATCHET" . . .

BERTRAND KIERN, Happy Hour Theatre, New Orleans

Film rental should be proportionate to the run of the picture, decreasing as it goes into subsequent run houses. The answer to all trouble would be if producers would make better pictures, most of this, then, would be unnecessary. To my opinion I think the plan is a hatchet to "chisel" you right out of the business. I understand the producing companies will not bother with advertising next year, only appointing one company to do it. They seem to have lost their value.

"BAD FOR INDUSTRY . . ."

H. P. GREEN, Owner and Operator of Five Neighborhood Theatres at Minneapolis

I don't think it would be good for the producers and the policy would hurt the small theatres. I think it would result in some pictures being skimped for the production of the Class A features. That would be bad for the industry and after the public got a look at Class A material it might decide that that wasn't as good as it expected and refuse to pay the prices asked. This business must have volume to make a profit and I don't believe this is the way to get it.

"STRONGLY IN FAVOR . . ."

ELMER C. RHODEN, Division Manager, Fox-Midwest Theatres, Kansas City

I am strongly in favor of a plan that will assign a certain type of product to a certain class of theatre on an exclusive-run basis, based on demand at particular houses, quality of pictures and ability of patrons to pay. A circuit enters into destructive competition with itself when it plays a picture in a Class A house and subsequently in a Class B house at a lower admission. The trend is toward exclusive runs. Age of pictures should never be the determining factor of cost or order of run. The innovation will be a boon to independent production.

"IT'S A BLUFF . . ."

JULIUS GOODMAN, Operating Ideal, Astor and Cameo, Baltimore

I feel that the exchanges have been successful all these years selling pictures to the subsequent as well as the first runs and I see no reason why they should change that policy because if they suddenly stop selling to the subsequent runs there are some fellows who are smart who will make pictures to release to the subsequent runs. I don't see why any company can get so cocky, because only about ten per cent of the pictures make any money and if 50 are bought only five are good and 45 are not. Those producers that try this method out by releasing to the first run houses and not to the subsequent runs are simply going to dig their own graves. I personally believe that it's a bluff. But I think they're too broad-minded to do those things. I don't think they will go through with it.

"NOTHING TO WORRY ABOUT . . ."

ED DUBINSKY, President and General Manager, Publix-Dubinsky Theatres, Kansas City

Exclusive runs are the only salvation for downtown first-run situations; it is the only way they can stay alive. The country is over-seated and it is my thought that by closing some houses, merging competitive situations and buying exclusive runs, Class A theatres will be able to survive. The subsequent run and independent exhibitor has nothing to worry about. There will always be sufficient product to take care of these theatres.

ALLIED CHECKS OVERSELLING

In an effort to minimize summer theatre closings in its territory, the Allied Theatre Owners of Iowa and Nebraska is canvassing members to determine which exhibitors have been oversold and require immediate assistance in the form of an adjustment of film rentals in order to remain open. In a questionnaire being mailed to exhibitors, the association asks whether the exhibitor will be able to stay open if he is unable to obtain a reduction, and whether he favors the organization of a relief committee for the purpose of helping distressed exhibitors.

Other information sought in the questionnaire is the average cost of features to the exhibitor; whether he feels he is oversold, and if so, by which companies; whether he has been refused any recent requests for rental adjustments; whether he finds the MGM percentage policy profitable, and his opinion on the organization's plan to work out an arbitration system with distributors in the Omaha and Des Moines territories, and whether the association should retain legal counsel to assist in adjusting contracts in the event distributors refuse to cooperate on arbitration and insist on "strict performance of contracts, regardless of the depression."

The association will present its findings to distributors in its territory after May 25, by which time it expects to conclude its survey of local conditions.

"FOR AND AGAINST . . ."

JOE GOLDBERG, Big Feature Rights Corporation, Louisville

There are many things that can be said for and against such a plan. However, I feel like it is something that we are not likely to see in actual operation for many a day, or perhaps many a year—if ever.

"TOO BIG FOR CARELESSNESS . . ."

LEE GOLDBERG, in charge of Warner Brothers Theatres in Kentucky

It is a matter that will have to be fully worked out over the round table. It is too big for any carelessness to creep in.

WILLIAM K. SAXTON, Manager, Loew's Century, Stanley, Parkway, Valencia at Baltimore

Particularly at this time, there are many people who cannot afford to pay the road show or the first-run prices of admission. Therefore, the public, having only a small amount to spend, would naturally force the distributors and the producers to show their pictures in the subsequent-run theatres if they want their pictures to be seen by the majority of the people today.

"SERIOUS BLOW" . . .

W. D. FULTON, Vice-President, Independent Theatre Owners of Kansas City, and Manager of South Town Theatres Company, Kansas City

The proposed reforms would be the most serious blow ever dealt the industry. The basic principle of the business since its infancy has been to provide mass entertainment by underselling the legitimate theatre. Producers like Carl Laemmle and Adolph Zukor have amassed fortunes on this principle. The proposed systems would alienate the masses and kill the goose that lays the golden eggs. The root of popularity has been derived from the small, suburban theatres. Children do not attend downtown theatres; take the better product away from them and you wean them from the theatre. Distributors know little or nothing about the exhibitors' problems. Should they be allowed to designate pictures for our patrons? The public would resent this financially and politically. I foresee a public demand for legislation to correct abuses certain to arise.

NEITHER PLAN . . .

HENRY LAZARUS, Newcomb and Wonderland Theatres, New Orleans

Under Lichtman's plan, houses would be arbitrarily classed as A and B with no consideration taken of audience taste. I can't see how the large theatres could go strictly on a quality product, while the smaller houses, presumably Class B, some of which have family audiences of culture, could be expected to run with the cheaper product. It is unfair to force on the B houses a type of picture consciously made for what "snooty minded" executives would consider the "public," and which would be made with some contempt. The idea of a central booking office commends itself from an economical viewpoint, but it savored too much of monopoly to meet favor with independents.

For Mr. Feist's plans, I can say still less. He has no thought of houses such as the ones I operate. The plan is typical of MGM.

"A BOOMERANG . . ."

E. VAN HYNING, President, Motion Picture Theatre Owners of Kansas and Missouri

The tremendous popularity of screen entertainment today is a natural outgrowth of its long availability to one and all at a low admission tariff. Depriving the greater part of the public of better motion pictures will prove a boomerang to the entire industry. As a civic worker, I feel that the distribution systems proposed will be a detriment to the small towns, which are sufficiently penalized by commercial attractions in larger neighboring towns. Where will the producers get enough prints to supply exclusive runs in large cities under the Class A designation? My snap judgment is that either plan is not feasible.

"PIPE DREAMS!" . . .

JAY MEANS, President, Independent Theatre Owners of Kansas City

Just more of the big ideas and pipe dreams of the producers. By putting the plans into effect, the producers will find they are not practical. Exclusive Class A runs will suffer most because most people will not pay a high price when they can see an equally good show—albeit different pictures—at a lower admission. The new systems will indirectly result in a boon to the industry since they will encourage independent production which will be unhampered by old methods and under skillful supervision will evolve new ideas. There will be a lot of independent pictures made next season and I'm glad of it.

¶ LOCAL EFFECTS DEEPLY STUDIED

Opinion Divided, Special Local Interviews With Managers Show

Special key city correspondents were delegated to interview various representative circuit and independent theatre owners in their territory for a consensus of local opinion regarding the proposed changes in the structure of distribution and exhibition as outlined last week by Felix Feist and Al Lichtman. Generally, circuit operators and managers were reluctant to discuss the changes, referring all queries to home office executives in New York. In New Orleans, they indicated that independents would only have trouble when the classification of theatres developed. The zoning and protection situation in New Orleans is not satisfactory to the independents even in its present form. Up in Providence, small independent operators said they did not know what angle to take yet, while out in Cleveland none would comment—either independent or circuit representatives—because of the pending monopoly suit against distributors.

Heated protest to the plans developed immediately in Houston, where independents, led by Will Horwitz, voiced a vigorous denunciation of the suggested changes. While Tampa's circuit operators were reluctant to comment, the majority appeared to be against both Lichtman's and Feist's proposals. The plans did not set well with independent operators. They said they see the stars whom they have helped to popularize "eliminated" for them.

Birmingham Favors Plan

The trend of opinion among Birmingham circuit operators is towards some such plan as Lichtman proposes. Their conviction seems fixed that something must be done at once to protect first-run houses. Independent operators in the same town lean towards the idea of subsequent runs, contending that Lichtman's plan, or anything similar to it, will deprive many of the masses of the type of entertainment which they now enjoy.

In Cincinnati, a few independents who would operate the proposed "Class B" houses, expressed themselves favorably and in accord, feeling that such a move would eliminate the first run competition which now exists, and enable them to play Class B pictures day and date, if desired, with the higher rating pictures at the Class A houses, and without regard to the present protection delay. The patron, they said, would thus be comparable to a shopper for merchandise, being able to take his choice of offerings, and receiving entertainment value in proportion to the amount paid for it. They felt, too, that they would thus also be able to attract considerable of the Class A patronage at times, figuring that a patron would be inclined to attend a first run Class B picture, regardless of whether he might also be a regular patron of the Class A houses.

Lone Independent Opposes

San Antonio exhibitors who are in favor of the plans include W. J. Lytle, general manager for Publix theatres at San Antonio, and L. R. Pierce, manager of the RKO-Majestic. The only opposing showman in this city who is against the new plans is Eph. Charnisky, manager of the Palace theatre.

Inquiries among several leading exhibitors in Virginia as to the projected plan to eliminate subsequent runs of better pictures elicited information to the effect that such a plan had been expected, but no one could say when it would begin.

Wisconsin exhibitors see various objections to the new plan of distribution presented by Al Lichtman, which, they say, however, if ironed out may prove a satisfactory vehicle. Their contention is that such a classification will improve business theoretically for the Class A houses and make it worse for the Class B theatres, thus resulting ultimately in fewer houses. Also classification will have to be arranged according to territories.

Vigorous Opposition in Indianapolis

The independent exhibitors of Indianapolis are vigorously opposed to the plan of distribution proposed by Al Lichtman and Felix Feist. They say the de luxe houses do not need to fear the small neighborhood theatre because the de luxe has much more to offer. They claim that it is uneconomic and that it would do away with competition. The representatives of the chain theatres were mostly in favor of this plan. They claim that they spend a lot of "hard earned" money on a campaign for a picture and then the public waits until it gets to the neighborhood. Something must be done, they say, and this looks like it might be the thing.

Louisville exhibitors and exchange men, in discussing the plan for elimination of subsequent runs, appear to feel that something is going to have to be done for the protection of the first run houses, but feel that any proposal will have to be given long and serious consideration, discussed across a round table, and every angle exposed to every argument available, before any action can or should be taken. Any such plan is radical in the extreme, they claim.

The gist of the suggestions offered at Louisville were that the first run or Class A house should be given full protection, and that instead of a 30 to 42 day lapse between first and subsequent runs the time should be not less than 90 days. When the suggestion of six months was made, it was contended that it would be too long, and that the producer probably would object, in that it would mean an investment idle too long.

"Might Be Good for Company With Limited Releases," Declares Kent

"Give me quality pictures and I'll sell them under any plan!"—Sidney R. Kent.

Suggested changes in the distribution structure of the industry as proposed last week by Al Lichtman, of United Artists, and by Felix Feist, of Metro, whereby pictures and theatres would be segregated into two distinct quality groups, struck an unresponsive chord in Sidney R. Kent, president of Fox Film Corporation and one of the industry's authorities on motion picture distribution and its problems. There have been few important changes or movements concerning distribution evolved in the past decade with which Kent has not been prominently identified. He was intimately associated with the various 5-5-5 conferences which took under advisement a few years ago a new form of contractual relationship between distributor and theatre owner, and is probably the strongest advocate of block booking.

Kent was interviewed aboard the Twentieth Century Limited, en route to New York following a visit to the Fox studios in California as he came eastward to open the company's sales convention.

Kent predicted that a new "down-to-earth" spirit in Hollywood would be reflected favorably in next season's films. He said that the Coast realizes now that something must be done to change conditions.

While reluctant to discuss the Lichtman or Feist suggestions, Kent said Lichtman's plan "might be a good one where a company handles a limited number of releases annually."

"Any plan needs very serious consideration and careful study. They might present legal complications."

Only recently, in addressing leaders of the industry, attending a coast meeting of the Academy of Arts and Sciences, Kent said, "It is vastly more important that this industry come back right than that it come back within two or three months, only half cured of the things from which it suffers today." Continuing, he said: "A good picture, made at the right price, can still gather together a big audience and make money for its producers."

One reason for current conditions in distribution, according to Kent, is that "too much of the distribution division has been left in the hands of the theatre departments instead of in the hands of the distributing department, and therefore the system of distribution has made little or no progress in the past five years."

"Advertising in the picture business is a lost art," Kent remarked. He said he has long since recognized the need for approximately 25 pictures of true road show calibre annually, from all sources, which should be "Barnum-ed and Bailey-ed and otherwise extensively ballyhooed. At present we allow the film to creep out of a can and onto a machine and we then expect it to sell itself from that point on. It can't be done, if we expect results."

"Although protection must undergo changes," Kent suggests that "extended protection should be given to the type of production" indicated. Just how the zoning system should be changed, Kent admitted he did not know. "That, too, needs close study," he said.

LIGHTMAN ADVOCATES A DIVISION OF PRODUCT FOR TYPES OF HOUSES

MPTOA President Says Better Films Should Show in "Class" Houses in Large Cities; Should Not Play "Dime" Theatres

All companies would make 52 "very high class" attractions each year, which would appeal only to class audiences, and be shown in the large cities in theatres catering to class audiences for extended runs, according to a distribution plan which, advocated by M. A. Lightman, president of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America, takes its place for the consideration of the industry at large beside those offered last week by Al Lichtman of United Artists and Felix Feist of MGM.

Elaborating, Lightman pointed out that, according to his plan, these pictures would be shown in the large cities to all class theatres, instead of showing in one theatre exclusively. These several theatres would be, says Lightman, "all carefully selected accounts, willing to grant reasonable exhibition rights to the prior run and in turn be reasonably protected on subsequent runs."

Pointing out that there is "something radically wrong with our present system of distribution," Lightman goes on to say:

"It has been suggested that exclusive runs of outstanding motion pictures are the solution to the problem. That is the easiest way out, but it will never work. It would be a fallacy to even try to put the plan into effect for reasons that are so very apparent and would cause much bitterness and discontent throughout the entire exhibition field. Nothing can be gained by simply trying to patch up the present system to meet the emergency.

"Need Drastic Cures"

"The motion picture industry is very ill and drastic ills need drastic cures. Let us analyze the exhibition of motion pictures. There is no other article known that is merchandised in the same manner—what else on earth is sold for say 75 cents today, two or three weeks later for 50 cents, a couple of weeks later for 25 cents and shortly thereafter for 15 cents, then double and triple features, then 10 cents. Think of it! The same article offered under pretty much the same conditions in prices ranging all the way from 75 cents to 10 cents; and sold to each and every theatre in a community regardless of size, of overseating, of policy or what have you. And, remember, there is no such thing as a second-hand motion picture. A picture is new until you have seen it. It is a miracle that we have survived this long operating on the present system.

"In the days of silent pictures this wasn't quite the same. There was a greater distinction in types of production and certainly a much greater distinction in manner of presentation. There were the stage shows, large orchestras, fine organists and so forth, to help support admission of the higher bracket.

"Let us consider the stage attractions—the class audiences are given two dollar plays showing only in class theatres—even though they cater only to class audiences they offer a range in prices to suit this type of clientele by discriminating between orchestra seats and balcony and gallery admissions. Vaudeville and good stock companies take care of the large group known as the mass audience, at popular prices. Then there is the tabloid, the burlesque and cheap melodramas, catering to the lowest bracket. It was never assumed that all types of legitimate shows should please all classes of patrons. The grand opera appeals to a select audience, the carnival to another audience. But not so with the motion picture business. At least not if we actually believe what we try to enforce, namely, that all pictures should appeal to all people all the time. The basic principle of our present system is ridiculous. The idea that certain distinctly class attractions should ever play in a 'dime' house or other houses catering to certain types of patrons is a most serious fallacy.

"Cheating the Industry"

"I will admit that many patrons of high intellect attend these 'dime' houses, but that is the basic trouble of our present system. They are cheating our industry out of hundreds of thousands of dollars. It is unreasonable to assume that an individual should be allowed to buy a Lincoln for the price of a Ford. If product built for the 10-cent houses were shown in 10-cent houses then the industry would do two things. It would divorce this high class patron from the 10-cent theatre, thus making him available to the theatres in the higher bracket and would be doing the exhibitor operating the 10-cent theatre a favor because he would again get busy catering to his old-time patron, the mass that wants that type of picture. It is for him that dialogue should be cut to an absolute minimum and where comedy, action, speed should be used widely. We have allowed two very serious things to happen; we have deprived higher class theatres of their rightful patrons and we have driven out the child patron and the class who formerly filled our theatres on Saturdays.

"We must realize two outstanding factors, first that we are vastly overseated and must devise ways and means of getting a maximum amount of revenue from a minimum amount of people, and secondly that we are being badly cheated by the public when we sell some of our very wonderful class attractions for 10 cents and two for 15 cents. We have permitted a condition to arise that puts entirely too cheap an exhibition value on our finer product.

"The exhibitor is not to be blamed for this condition. The type of some of the product, the competitive element, the fact that pictures are sold to every possible account, regardless of the price, policy, etc., has forced many exhibitors to do things they would cheerfully abandon if it were possible.

Says Success of Quality Theatres Depends on Maintenance of Quality Product; "Just Pictures" Will Not Suffice

"Summing up, I would advocate that all companies make 52 very high class attractions per year that would appeal only to class audiences. In large cities they would show for extended runs only in theatres catering to class audiences. But instead of showing exclusively in one theatre they should be sold to all class theatres, all carefully selected accounts, willing to grant reasonable exhibition rights to the prior run and in turn be reasonably protected on subsequent runs. I would advocate 25 cents, or certainly not less than 20 cents as the minimum admission price to be charged for these few attractions. Only a limited number of selected houses should be sold this product. Any house willing to operate on the above terms should be entitled to compete for the product if conditions warranted doing so.

"In the next bracket I would advocate fine quality films made for family trade and the average public. Splendid pictures like 'Sooky,' 'When a Fellow Needs a Friend,' 'Connecticut Yankee' and the like, would come in this class. These pictures should be shown in the majority of theatres but should not be sold at all to double feature houses charging 15 cents or 10 cents.

After they have been shown in houses operating on a fair basis of competion they should be withdrawn. The houses charging the low admission prices should show product built for them.

Plan for Split Weeks

"In towns of from 5,000 to 30,000 or even 50,000 population, if a run of one week is too long the exhibitor would show the class attractions during the first half of the week at advanced prices and the family and mass type during the last half at lower prices, thus catering to families when they really enjoy coming in groups. This is most valuable to theatre owners. I would even advocate not having a special children's price for the selected class group, thereby discouraging child attendance at sophisticated and sometimes immoral pictures. This would be a most wonderful step forward in eliminating any desire for censorship.

"Of course there will be a great deal of criticism to this plan but something of this nature is inevitable if we are to survive. There must be some means of distinguishing between values for class appeal, mass appeal and investment valuations.

"The success of this plan naturally depends upon the complete cooperation of the producer. It is obvious that product, as it is being delivered to the exhibitor today, would never measure up to the requirements of the plan which I propose. If quality theatres are to prosper, they must be supplied with quality pictures. The production of 'just pictures' for houses catering to the better classes could not continue under the plan. Quantity production must give way to quality production."

LASKY STEPS OUT AS PARAMOUNT OFFICER IN CHARGE OF PRODUCTION

Board Elects and Finds No Post For Executive Who Ruled at Studios for Many Years; Lasky Denies "Resigning"

With the drama that is as inherent in the operation of the motion picture industry as in its product, on the same day Jesse L. Lasky has stepped out of the position of production vice president of the Paramount Publix Corporation and Cecil B. DeMille, a co-founder of that great production machine, has returned to the concern as an individual producer.

Tuesday in New York the board of directors of Paramount elected officers and found no post for Mr. Lasky, who has been the executive in general charge of production these many, many years. Late in April Mr. Lasky was asked by the corporation to take a leave of absence of three months, subject to a recall on two weeks notice. Mr. Lasky is this week at his home in Santa Monica. In Hollywood it is known that there have been conversations aimed at interesting him in participation in the operations of the Hollywood Screen Guild, now in the formative stages under the sponsorship of M. C. Levee.

Not in Executive Ranks

In its official announcement of the action of the board of directors, Paramount made no reference to Lasky's departure from the executive roster of the company. Only the absence of his name from any executive capacity in Paramount and the failure of the board to designate a first vice president, revealed that no provision was made for Lasky in the executive ranks of the company.

Questioned about Lasky's retirement, an official spokesman for the corporation said: "Paramount has nothing to say about the Lasky matter."

On the West Coast, Lasky denied emphatically that he had tendered a "resignation." He reiterated that his contract with Paramount does not expire until Dec. 31, 1934, and that he is on a three-months leave of absence and is "holding himself ready to return on two weeks notice."

Adolph Zukor was reelected president of Paramount Publix at the board meeting, and Sam Katz and Emanuel Cohen were reelected vice presidents. The complete executive staff of the corporation, and a comparison with the roster of officials who held office at the time of Tuesday's election follows. The lists are recorded in the order in which they were listed by Paramount:

THE BOARD OF DIRECTORS

Only one change has been made in the Paramount board of directors since the last meeting in March. At the annual meeting in April, Warren Wright, president of the Calumet Baking Corporation, and several other companies, was elected to the board to fill a vacancy. Presumably, that election foresaw the retirement of Lasky from the board, as Paramount now says that Lasky's absence does not create a new vacancy on the board, and that the present directorial roster of 20 is complete. The present membership of the board is comprised of the following: Frank Bailey, chairman, Prudence Co., Inc.; Jules E. Brulatour, Eastman Films; Emanuel Cohen, vice president; William H. English, trustee, Brooklyn Trust Co.; John Cecil Graham, general foreign representative; John Hertz, chairman finance committee; Felix E. Kahn; Gilbert W. Kahn, Loeb & Co.; Sam Katz, vice president; Austin C. Keough, secretary; Ralph A. Kohn, treasurer; Albert D. Lasker, chairman of the board, Lord & Thomas and Logan; Warren Wright; B. P. Schulberg, managing director West Coast studios; Emil E. Shauer, assistant treasurer; Casimir I. ## Cecil B. DeMille, a Co-founder of Producing Organization Nearly 20 Years Ago, Returns to Company as Producer

It is now nearly twenty years ago that a group of young and hopeful adventurers including Jesse Lasky, Arthur Friend, Samuel Goldwyn and Cecil B. DeMille formed the Jesse L. Lasky Feature Play Company in New York.

Together they trouped into the offices of Edwin Milton Royle and paid the shocking sum of $5,000 for motion picture rights to his great stage success, "The Squaw Man." Presently a production expedition, with Mr. DeMille in charge, and Dustin Farnum as leading man, started west to make the play. They intended to start work at Flagstaff, Arizona. One look about from the station platform sent them away on the same train and they came to a pause at last in Hollywood, where they rented a barn, at the corner of Selma avenue and Vine street, as the home of the new project. That became the vast West Coast plant of the subsequent Famous Players-Lasky concern, the Paramount Publix of today.

Mr. DeMille in the succeeding years made a large proportion of the company's most successful product and many spectacular productions, including "The Ten Commandments." Departing from the concern and operating as an independent he made "The King of Kings," distributed eventually through Producers Distributing Corporation and its assign and successor, Pathe Exchange, Inc. It was probably the most ambitious project of the screen at the end of the silent era, and in fact lived to see some distribution in a synchronized version.

Religious Interest Reflected

The more spectacular of DeMille's endeavors have always reflected his religious interest, and his present connection with Paramount is in a kindred project, a romance-spectacle picture entitled "The Sign of the Cross," from Wilson Barrett's play, a story of intrigue at Nero's court and the adventures of a Christian girl and a Roman soldier. This will be Mr. DeMille's first major endeavor since the general adoption of sound and talking technique for the screen.

No official announcement of the DeMille connection has been made by Paramount, although the schedule of the coming season's product has announced "The Sign of the Cross" with DeMille listed as the director-producer. A contract is yet to be closed. It is understood that some form of profit sharing covers the consideration clauses. Mr. DeMille went into his new suite of offices on the Paramount lot Tuesday, the same day that the directors were electing officers in New York.

Mr. Lasky, who is now no longer an official of the concern, and Mr. DeMille are close personal friends, dating from association in the show business in pre-picture days.

BROADWAY STAGE FROM CAMERA EYE

Screen Possibilities of Several Current Plays Are Discussed by Critic in His Eighth Article

By BENJAMIN DeCASSERES

MERRY-GO-ROUND

The Provincetown Playhouse, the little manger where many a masterpiece has been nurtured and where many a cake of dramatic guano has been hurled in the mugs of the critics, made a sudden and somewhat tremendous noise with a strong melodrama, "Merry-Go-Round," done in about eighteen scenes by two young fellows just out of Yale, Abert Maltz and George Sklar.

Hardened old theatre seat-warmer that I am, I rose on my haunches and applauded vigorously after each act. I applauded not only the play itself, but the good acting of most of those concerned.

"Merry-Go-Round" is a pipe for the screen. The night I was there I sorted out three picture men looking over the ground. And I was buttonholed in a corner and told that David Wark Griffith had been there twice.

It will take some daring to do this play, as it is going to tread on many political toes. The theme of the play, somewhat masked and veiled, is why they never want the guy that bumped off Arnold Rothstein.

Ed Martin is a bellhop in a swanky hotel in a large city in the million pop. class. He answers a call to a room occupied by a celebrated gambler and bootlegger, Stransky by name. While he is in the room, in pops Jigs Zelli, who shoots Stransky dead and lays out Ed Martin with a flesh wound.

Zelli carefully removes some papers from Stransky's pocket. These papers are the important thing in the play. They show that Stransky has been lending large sums to the mayor and judges. The mayor and some of the judges are also interested in some of Zelli's and Stransky's speakeasies and clubs.

Ed Martin recovers, and in the police line-up, after flatly refusing, finally picks Zelli as the murderer of Stransky. But Zelli has the upper hand. He threatens that if an indictment is brought against him he will broadcast to the newspapers all that he knows about Mayor Manning. The head of the political party now begins to give orders.

Something has got to be done to goose-grease Public Opinion, so Ed Martin, the bellhop, is given the third degree in a heart-wringing scene, forced to sign a confession that he murdered Stransky and he is found hanged in his cell—the story given out is that he committed suicide.

The party and the Mayor—and the gamblers and bootleggers—are saved, and Justice is satisfied. Martin has a wife and a powerful lawyer friend; but they can do nothing. However, in the picture—and it'll make a wow—they will get Ed out of the scrape. Here is a chance for a tremendous climax. And it is time the harp was taken out of the hands of screen public officials.

"Merry-Go-Round" clicks from beginning to end. It pounds you between the eyes. Get that Columbia University stuff out of your noodle, Jim Cagney, and jump into this picture. It'll put you in Class AA.

Elisha Cook, Jr., did splendid work as the framed bellhop. There is a cast of thirty-four.

ANOTHER LANGUAGE

Right on top of the surprise of "Merry-Go-Round" there appeared unheralded, unballyhooed and almost without a whisper a solid piece of dramatic work in which there lies the framework and some of the stuffing of a good picture.

The play is "Another Language," by Rose Franken. Its theme is the Family vampire versus an individual (in fact, two) who want to bust up the tyranny of "Thou Shalt!"

It varies between comedy and strong drama, and ends by ducking to the public. I'd like to see some bold picture director have the kid walk out with his young aunt at the end of the picture, leaving the Hallam family flat on its roundhouse.

The eleven characters in this play are all Hallams. They are a mediocre, philistine bunch of respectable business hams. Over it all presides old Mrs. Hallam (Margaret Wycherly). There are a raft of sons with their wives, whose commonplace stupidities provide a great deal of fun.

Well, the fly in the family ointment is young Jerry Hallam. He's sick of this card-playing, mother-worshipping family. He wants to be an artist. He finds a sympathetic ear in his beautiful blond aunt Stella (played luringly by Dorothy Stickney).

They fall in love with one another. Stella's husband, Victor Hallam, is not any too loving—just another stick-in-the-mud Hallam. He bounces out of the house and leaves Jerry and Stella alone at night, never dreaming that—

The two high dramatic moments are in the second and third acts—both muffed by the playwright. In the second act Stella tells them weakly that she's for Jerry against the family. What a speech she could have made here, knocking the family for a black-eye and a rope-tumble!

In the third act the cat comes out of the bag before the whole family. There is a lot of noise. The boy and his aunt had not really sinned (believe it or not, Mr. Ripley), and Victor takes his wife home.

Bah! As I said before, Jerry and Stella should have told the Hallam family to go to Aichedoublell. The public isn't as dopey as it looks. It's a picture in the hands of an intelligent and salty director. Needs new dialoguing, too. And change the aunt to a second cousin—so as to keep our souls unspotted.

THE MAN WHO CHANGED HIS NAME

I suppose, in time, all of Edgar Wallace's plays and books will be dished up on the screen. It's a pity he died—he could have kept us entertained for another generation.

"The Man Who Changed His Name" is enormously entertaining hokum and looks like a Clive Brooks. With Fay Bainter and Frank Conroy doing the leads in this new Broadway production, it wrestles with your guessing bone almost up to the fall of the last curtain. It would click in every scene.

An English country house. Mrs. Clive is carrying on a flirtation with Frank O'Ryan. It is innocent, but she thinks that her husband suspects her being guilty. Now Clive, the husband, has changed his name since he left Canada. Wife and lover discover the fact and also that he has murdered, as they think, a former wife and her lover by a most diabolical means and escaped the gallows because nothing could be proved.

Both Mrs. Clive and her lover (and the audience) are in breathless and death-fearing suspense at every movement the husband makes. The "shots" for the screen and the light screams of the matinee ladies can be beautifully visualized—if you have screen-projection sense.

It turns out in the end that the husband was not the murderer at all, but is a perfectly normal, boresome old dub—just the thing Clive Brook can do. And there is lots of humor in it, too.

BROADWAY BOY

"Broadway Boy," by Wallace Manheimer and Isaac Paul, is a flimsy satire on shoestring show producers. It is funny and dramatic in spots. It could be pepped up for the picture-trade for a lot of gay hokum and crying-out-loud disputes.

A tight-wad uncle doesn't approve of his nephew going into the Bright Lights game. Well, Bert, the nephew, who has a five-grand Liberty bond, sails into the Big Sucker game, anyhow. And his troubles begin, naturally. The director re-writes. The stage-hands threaten a strike because of non-union truckmen. When the rows get straightened out the leading lady appears cock-eyed for the opening performance. Wild laughter.

The play that Bert produces is played from back-stage. Crazy stuff in the producer's office and, incidentally, the author drags a dramatic critic out of his aisle seat and lands on the pivot of his jaw. Could this have been George Jean Nathan?

Clarence Derwent and Roberta Beatty were the big noises.

Put a lot of girls with good legs in this with a gang of high-pressure players and it might furnish a good hour and a quarter's fun with short and snappy dialogue.

PICTURE BOOK

1932 - 1933

Merlin H. Aylesworth
President
Radio-Keith-Orpheum Corporation
Chairman of the Board
RKO-Radio Pictures, Inc.

The past two years have demonstrated the solidity of the motion picture industry. They have been as severe a test as might be imagined. And in passing through them we have discovered that entertainment given in motion picture theatres is still in high demand; that the public of America has remained a screen public.

From the early days of the films to the present a continuous improvement in material and technique has been easily discerned. The time long ago arrived when the finest talents of the world were displayed on the screen..the fine writers and the fine actors. In ever-increasing measure this progress is making itself felt.

RKO-Radio is not only in the foreground of this trend, but its complete faith in the future is being expressed by its participation in the great Radio City project now under way in New York. In that vast building plan RKO-Radio will have two magnificent theatres, one of them the largest in the world. It will have its own building and will be a principal unit in a development which, upon its completion, will be a marvel of America and the world.

RKO-Radio, to put it bluntly, has something to live up to. And just as bluntly, RKO-Radio means to do it.

Box office figures for the 1931-32 season prove beyond question that only outstanding pictures are now making money for exhibitors and producers. There is no middle ground—no place for the old "average program" attraction.

RKO-RADIO recognizes this situation. To be successful this company MUST deliver only BIG SHOWS—the kind bound to attract the crowds. In selecting our program for 1932-33 we have discarded any number of stories, which, a year ago would probably have comfortably filled your theatre.

David O. Selznick, RKO-RADIO chief of production, who has already turned out such winners as "The Lost Squadron", "Symphony of Six Million" and "State's Attorney", has insisted—and the entire organization is backing him to the limit—that for the new season this company shall make only such productions as will be absolutely irresistible to the great mass of theatregoers. Our entire resources, finances, artistry and manpower, have been marshalled and are being employed toward this objective.

You will appreciate, in reading this book, the TIMELINESS OF RKO-RADIO PICTURES. You will find that picture after picture is based on material which has been, and is, enjoying terrific circulation. In addition, several properties have been acquired of so unusual a nature that the show world and the public will be astonished when they are revealed. You will note a national plan for selling direct to the public and creating your audiences in advance.

RKO-RADIO has gathered together great stars, supporting casts of unusual merit, the most capable of directors, and authors of international following. Such titles as have been chosen so far have the click of gold in them, and all future titles will be as carefully selected.

Every showman worthy of the name who analyzes our program will be impressed by these steps for his box office profit insurance.

48 FEATURES COMING FROM FOX; "DOWN TO EARTH" FILMS: KENT

Product for New Season Also Includes 52 Issues of Magic Carpet and 104 of Newsreel, Sales Convention Told

Forty-eight features, 52 issues of the Magic Carpet of Movietone and 104 issues of Fox Movietone Newsreel will be distributed by Fox Film Corporation in the 1932-33 season, 200 members of the sales forces were informed by James R. Grainger, vice president, at the 28th annual convention held this week at the New York offices of the company. Under a policy of latitude in production for the purpose of gauging the trend of popular demand, only two-thirds of the scheduled pictures were announced, the others to be made known as the season advances.

"Showmanship went out one door when standardization came in the other," President Sidney R. Kent told the assembled sales personnel, insisting that standardization of production and exhibition has been "the damnation" of the business, and must give way to imagination and personality.

He said he was confident the business would right itself by virtue of "a long pull," and stressed the fact that a new order of things, now present, would entail decentralization of theatre operation, and the return of the personal element into all phases of the industry. Fox theatres, under the Skouras management, will follow the course pointed, Kent indicated. Scoring the industry for falling down on exploitation, the Fox chief promised that his company's product will be "Barnum and Bailey-ed."

He told the salesmen and branch managers one of their greatest tasks was the building and maintaining of good will. "Sell nothing indefinite," was the burden of his pronouncement to the force. He expressed the opinion that action and a minimum of dialogue would aid materially in bringing the children back to the theatre, a step important to the recovery of business.

"Back to First Principles"

Kent paid a compliment to Winfield Sheehan and Sol Wurtzel, returning to the studio on June 1. Turning to Grainger, beside him, the president said: "There is nothing I want to take away from you. What I want to do is to help you become a bigger and greater power in the industry." Grainger was obviously affected, and the sales force vigorously applauded the complimentary remark.

One definite aim in Fox production, announced by President Sidney Kent, is to make pictures for the average audience. Kent, in his first meeting with the field men, said that "pictures must be made down to earth to meet the average mind and to appeal to the average audience."

"Highly sophisticated pictures are fine for a limited class but deadly for the masses," Kent declared. "We are prepared to get back to first principles and make pictures from simple, human stories of universal appeal."

SAYS KENT OF NEW PRODUCT FROM FOX

"Pictures must be made down to earth to meet the average mind and to appeal to the average audience. Highly sophisticated pictures are fine for a limited class, but deadly for the masses. We are prepared to get back to first principles and make pictures from simple, human stories of universal appeal."

Kent said that he had learned to respect the Fox sales organization when he was with a competing company and added that he was convinced that Fox Films could accomplish everything it had achieved previously.

Other speakers included E. R. Tinker, chairman, Vice Presidents W. C. Michel, C. E. Richardson and Glenn Griswold and Truman Talley of Fox Movietone News.

Returning from the Coast Friday, Kent said before the convention opened that the Skouras Brothers, under the deal by which they are managing the Fox theatres, "have succeeded in cutting losses considerably, in obtaining reductions in union wage scales, in effecting general economies, and, what is more important, converting money thus saved into terms of manpower."

Kent said he had voluntarily reduced his own salary and that a number of high salaries at the plant had been readjusted, while James R. Grainger "will work for two years and a half and get paid for two."

It was indicated that Richard A. Rowland's one-year contract, which expires in July, will be extended when he returns East soon to separate his activities from production and concentrate on story material and new talent. Kent will leave for the Coast early next month with Winfield Sheehan and Sol M. Wurtzel to reinstall them in their old posts at the studios.

Sax To Bring New Equipment For Vitaphone Plant Opening

Sam Sax, in charge of the Warner Vitaphone studio in Brooklyn, will return for the re-opening of the eastern plant, set for June 13, with new recording equipment from the Warner Coast plant. The entire short lineup is completed with the exception of one S. S. Van Dine number.

Three pictures will go into work when the plant re-opens: the Van Dine short, a Jack Haley subject and another one-reeler. The 1932-33 list is expected to be larger than the 123 shorts produced in the East and the 26 Leon Schlesinger cartoons produced on the Coast for the 1930-31 season.

Brandt Elected To Presidency of World Wide

Joe Brandt on Wednesday was elected president of World Wide Pictures, one of the feature units of Educational and Joe Goldberg was elected vice-president. Budd Rogers was named circuit sales manager of World Wide. Brandt was to be elected to a vice presidency in Educational at a meeting on Thursday.

In commenting on the elections, E. W. Hammons, president of Educational, said Wednesday night that the new appointments will not result in any changes of personnel.

Hammons said he has engaged Jack Hayes on the Coast for the production of six one-reel shorts, featuring the Hollywood Baby Stars and directed by Charles Lamont. Charles Mack of the former comedy team of Moran and Mack, will be starred in a feature length comedy, to be released through World Wide, according to Hammons, who indicated that Mack is subject to call for two more features upon the completion of the first. Hammons indicated that the Mack comedy would not run a length of 15 reels as variously reported.

Erpi To Install New Theatre Sound Equipment Immediately

Electrical Research Products, Inc., Western Electric unit, plans immediate installation in theatres of its new wide range recording system, as rapidly as manufacture permits. The system entails the use of a new high frequency loud speaker unit declared capable of reproducing sound even beyond the limits of audibility.

A preview of the new system at the Majestic in Providence last week, is said to have resulted in favorable audience reaction. Demonstrated were the frequency and volume ranges. Clock beats and whispered dialogue can be plainly heard with the new apparatus, it is claimed.

The installation and demonstration was worked out by Erpi in conjunction with Edward Fay, who owns and operates the Majestic, which was selected by Western Electric for the test because it is accepted as being very suitable for such purposes.

Gunning, "Father" of Outdoor Advertising, Dead in Chicago

Robert J. Gunning, 76, considered to have been the originator of outdoor advertising, having been the first to lease a wall surface for re-sale to advertisers, died in Chicago recently. Gunning was also considered the first to erect an outdoor ad structure and to provide a creative service for outdoor advertisers.

Gunning started as an apprentice in a Chicago sign shop at the age of 13, and branched out for himself when 18 as a traveling sign painter. He established the Gunning System in Chicago in the 70's, expanding rapidly until he controlled a nationwide painted bulletin service through branches and affiliates.

Sarnoff Calls Shorter Hours, With More Leisure Time for Entertainment, the Necessary Adjustment to 'Machine Age'

LEISURE WILL BENEFIT SCREEN, SAYS SARNOFF

Motion pictures will benefit from an extended leisure which will accrue to the American public through the further development of the machine age, David A. Sarnoff, president of the Radio Corporation of America, told delegates to the Radio Pictures convention at the Drake hotel, Chicago, this week. Sarnoff's address was made by telephone from New York, and amplified at the convention hall.

"The screen," said Sarnoff, "has lost none of its fundamental charm, despite the fact that it is in the midst of technical and economic change. Its stories of people are told to other people through the most effective media—pictures and speech. Developments of an age of intense inventive effort and industrial resourcefulness have improved and strengthened the basic nature of its appeal. Its best years should lie ahead.

"The march of the times," he declared, "is toward the greater liberation of the individual and the greater reliance on the machine. We have in the United States some 120,000,000 people living in a country which is capable of producing, with its present productive equipment, everything that is necessary to allow all of us to have everything we need to eat, everything we need to wear, houses to live in, schools and churches, automobiles to ride in, theatres and radios, athletics and other recreational facilities. All this could be had, the economists tell us, with no more than 30 hours of work by the individual weekly.

"In the recent economic upheaval the machine contributed toward overproduction and consequent unemployment. In the period toward which the transition of today is directing us, the machine must be made to give regulated employment of shorter hours, and greater opportunity for leisure. One may look on this era of change with much encouragement, for ahead lies the opportunity for an art such as ours to make its most conspicuous contributions. The technical age will have failed if it gives to the individual merely the leisure of idleness. It will have served if it gives a fuller life, with wholesome recreation, education and entertainment."

The three serials, each of which will consist of 12 two-reel episodes, are: "Airplane Express," "Lost in the Malayan Jungles" and "The Last Frontier," the last-named based on the Courtney Riley Cooper novel.

The short subject list includes, in addition to 104 issues of Pathe News and seven Pathe Review magazine reels, 42 two-reel comedies and 65 single reel subjects. Two-reel comedies include six each of the following: Charlie Chaplin synchronized re-issues; Masquers' all-star; Clark & McCullough; Edgar Kennedy's "Mr. Average Man"; Harry Sweet; Mickey McGuire, and a seventh series to be announced later.

The 65 single reel subjects are comprised of 13 NBC Musical Broadcasts; 26 Aesop's Fables; 13 Tom and Jerry animated cartoons, and six Vagabond Adventures.

Sarnoff Address Telephoned

Approximately 200 members of the RKO Radio sales department, including home office executives, district and branch managers, and salesmen, were in attendance at the meeting which opened on Monday and was concluded late Wednesday.

The business sessions were opened by Depinet, with the following home office men in attendance: M. H. Aylesworth, RKO president; Lee Marcus, eastern production head; Jules Levy, general sales manager; Cress Smith, Western and Southern division manager; E. L. McEvoy, Eastern and Canadian division manager; Al Mertz, short subject sales manager; Courtland Smith, president of Pathe News; Jack Connolly, general manager of Pathe News; Fred O'Connell, general manager of the Van Beuren Corporation; Harold B. Franklin, president of RKO Theatres; B. B. Kahane, president of RKO Radio Pictures; Joseph Plunkett, vice president of RKO Theatres; Robert F. Sisk, advertising and publicity director of RKO, and Phil Reisman, vice president of RKO Theatres.

A feature of the convention's first business session was an address, telephoned from New York and amplified in the convention hall, by David Sarnoff, president of Radio Corporation of America. In his address, Sarnoff agreed that the development of the "machine age" in America contributed to unemployment, but added that a social and industrial adjustment is necessary to overcome the effect of mechanized labor. The necessary adjustment, he said, calls for shorter working hours, and the resultant leisure which will be afforded the American public, he believes, will be a boon and inspiration to entertainment mediums, which will benefit from this new leisure.

Playing for RKO Radio

The afternoon session Monday was devoted to a discussion of short subject product, and was addressed by Mertz, McConnell, Courtland Smith and Connolly. The delegates were guests of the National Broadcasting Company at the Chicago Studios in the Merchandise Mart.

3,500 Installations

On Tuesday, screenings of new RKO Radio product were held in the Cinema Art Theatre, and afternoon sessions were addressed by Lee Marcus and E. O. Heyl, manager of the Photophone division of RCA Victor. Heyl said that replacement of equipment, the universal adoption of A-C current for all models, and widespread interest in the new 16 mm. sound-on-film portable apparatus have kept the Photophone division of RCA Victor at capacity production. More than 3,500 installations of reproducing apparatus have been made by RCA Victor, he said, and the company has equipped 30 licensees of recording apparatus in Hollywood, and important studios in England, France, Italy, Australia and India.

David O. Selznick, Radio Pictures production chief, who was unable to be present at the convention, sent a message in which he said: "We are facing a big job and a big responsibility. Anything further I have to say will be said with what I trust will be box office product."

Smalley to Replace House In Norwich Razed by Fire

Contracts have been signed by William C. Smalley, head of the Smalley theatre circuit with headquarters in Cooperstown, N. Y., for the erection of a 900-seat theatre in Norwich, N. Y., to replace the Smalley theatre destroyed last March 23.

The house will have a single seating floor, and despite the small seating capacity, will have a stage suitable for vaudeville and musical productions. The style of architecture is of Mediterranean pattern. The architect is Victor A. Rigaumont.

PRO-INDUSTRY LEGISLATORS HOPE TO LIFT EXEMPTION FROM 10 CENTS

Senator Warns 162,500 Would Lose Jobs; Massachusetts Governor's Plans for Special State Tax Meet Protest

California Senators Lead Fight To Restore At Least the 46 Cent Figure Voted Originally in House Deliberations

By F. L. BURT, Washington

With the Senate digging deep into the new tax bill which it now has before it, with a view of passing it along to the conference committee of the House and Senate by the end of May, it is freely predicted that the 10-cent exemption from admission tax recommended by the Senate's finance committee will not be able to withstand the assaults of members who have the interests of the theatre at heart and that the tax-free admissions will be increased materially, possibly reaching the original House figure of 45 cents. The Senate received the revenue bill last Friday from its finance committee, for disposal.

Senator Hiram Johnson of California charged President Hoover and Ogden L. Mills, secretary of the treasury, with being responsible for the 10-cent exemption maximum. Senator Samuel M. Shortridge, also of California, declared that "the Senate should at least agree with the House and fix the rate at 46 cents." Senator Shortridge declared:

"More than 5,000 motion picture theatres in the United States have closed since 1929, due to unemployment's drain on attendance. If the proposed tax on admissions of 10 cents and over is enacted, at least another 5,000 will close, unable to meet rent and payrolls. The nation's normal supply of entertainment will have been cut in half.

Warns 162,500 Would Lose Jobs

"The effect on producers and distributors, who also depend on theatre customers, will be a similar 50 per cent reduction. It is proposed, through this tax, to complete the wiping out of at least half of a major industry.

"Half of the 325,000 Americans normally employed will be kept out of jobs. Half of the 1,250,000 constituting their families will be without livelihood. Half of the 3,000,000 whose family heads are employed in normal times because of the motion picture industry's purchases from other industries, will further be added to the unemployment crisis. The revenue expected by the sponsors of the 10-cent admission tax will not materialize, and many normal tax values will be destroyed.

"No industry is more vital today than the motion picture industry, fulfilling its necessary educational function and providing a let-off for care and worry. And no industry is in less position to bear an added crushing burden of taxation.

"The proposal to make up almost one-tenth of the nation's deficit by taxing the amusement of children, the unemployed and the poor, while at the same time exempting a long list of luxuries, including jewelry, furs, yachts and motorboats, is one of the most uneconomic propositions imaginable."

Committee Itself Uncertain

That the finance committee itself was uncertain of the popularity of its action in reducing the exemption is shown by the fact that in its report to the Senate more space was devoted to a defense of the admission tax than to any other of the miscellaneous levies.

"Although realizing the importance of recreation afforded by theatre entertainments, which constitute the principal subject of this tax," it was explained, "your committee believes that theatre attendance, even at low prices, indicates definite tax-paying ability and considers that admissions provide a basis for tax, the incidence of which would be broadly distributed, and the burden of which would not be particularly heavy at the rates proposed. In the existing emergency a tax of two cents on a 20-cent admission or a tax of three cents on a 30-cent admission would not seem to constitute unduly burdensome contributions to the support of the Federal Government.

Aroused by an avalanche of communications from their constituents, members of Congress are preparing to launch vigorous attacks upon some of the levies provided by the finance committee in its last minute, frantic effort to get rid of the legislation following a denunciation of the measure by Secretary Mills. The admissions tax will be the subject of a heavy barrage and members who are opposed to a 10-cent exemption confidently predict their success in raising the figure.

Would Be Up to Conferees

If the Senate exemption differs from that provided by the House it will be left for the confereees from the two bodies to agree upon the figure finally to be carried in the bill. The conference committee will have wide latitude in this respect, being permitted to accept either the House or Senate rate or any rate in between. While the recommendations of a conference committee may be rejected by either house, they are usually agreed to.

Describing it as an unfair attack on the entertainment of needy millions, Hollywood film producers have joined protests against the 10-cent admission tax. Louis B. Mayer, president of the Producers' Association, vice-chairman of the Republican California State Committee and close friend of President Hoover, led the attack, saying: "Motion pictures at 10, 15 and 20 cents or even higher prices are not a luxury, but a necessity. The proposed tax, if allowed to pass, will literally rob the great mass of people, otherwise suppressed by moderate

QUOTA IS BIG FACTOR IN MODIFIED LAW LIMITING FILMS FOR MEXICO

Prohibitive Duty on Talking Pictures Applies Only in Cases Where Distributors Exceed Film and Disc Quotas

By JAMES LOCKHART, Mexico City

Mexico has effected import duties on all non-Spanish films and discs which, while high enough, are not as bad as they seem, it is pointed out by distributors in Mexico City. The impression has gone far and wide that the new imposts feature a boost of from eight pesos to 75 pesos (approximately $2.50 to $25) the kilo (2.2046 lbs.) on all such material, a proposition that would make all importing prohibitive. Such was the case when the measure was approved by the national legislature last year. But, the distributors explain, the law, which is designed to protect Mexico's infant production industry and to encourage cinema entertainment in Spanish, had that sticker in its original form, but it was considerably modified during the respite in effectment which was allowed until April 21 by President Pascual Ortiz Rubio at the petition of Mexican and foreign distributors and exhibitors in the Republic.

Quota Is Tax Factor

Distributors point out that the modified law provides the 75 peso per kilo levy on foreign language "talkies" only in cases where distributors exceed import film and disc quotas, which the measure establishes and which demands that importers and distributors claim in order to gain benefits under the toned-down regulations. For the purpose of these quotas, importers are classed in two groups—A and B. The A group are those whose annual importations do not exceed 120,000 meters of film; the B group are those who bring in each year from 120,000 to 200,000 meters. Importers and distributors are required to register with the ministry of finance the amounts of films they bring into the country annually, to be assigned groups for import levies. Duties which are the most important that must be met by these groups are:

Silents, without sound-on-film and with Spanish titles, 10 pesos (approximately $3.35) per kilo for group A, and 15 pesos (about $5) the kilo for group B; the same class of pictures but with sound-on-film, 35 pesos ($11.50) the kilo for A and 45 pesos ($15) per kilo for B. All foreign language discs bear 20 pesos the kilo impost. Spanish pictures without sound on the film pay eight pesos per kilo, with five pesos more for discs, and 12 pesos for sound on the film.

While all distributors and exhibitors admit that the new import tariffs have made their operations considerably difficult, none deems that wholesale closures of houses will result, as would have been the case, they say, had the levy been kept at $25 the kilo. Nevertheless, some exhibitors are none too cheerful about prospects. Some of them intimate that increased operation costs, as a direct result of the elated duties on non-Spanish "talkies," which constitute practically all pictures available in this country, may bring about the posting of "closed for repairs" signs on not a few of the smaller houses, especially in the neighborhoods.

Smuggling, Says Union Speaker

Good copy is being afforded the Mexican press and much amusement is being provided film men in Mexico by doings and sayings at the national convention of various theatrical unions in Mexico City. Speakers at one of the sessions made the accusation that certain unnamed distributors are getting around the new tariff measure for pictures by smuggling into Mexico, through such border points as Nuevo Laredo and Ciudad Juarez, negatives of films which they develop in Mexico City, and thereby take advantage of the fact that the law does not cover undeveloped films. Mexico City distributors aver that this charge is news to them and that they are all abiding by the measure.

Asserting that the cinema and radio are killing the theatre in Mexico, the convention asked the Mexico City civic government to give thespians a big break to the extent of compelling all picture houses to devote their night shows to vaudeville acts, and if that can't be done, to make the cinemas completely suspend operations two or three times a week as a means of forcing the amusement seeking public to patronize the playhouses. Film men in the capital assert that these plans for helping along the down-at-heel theatre at their expense don't worry them and that the thespians' projects won't get to first base as the screen in these parts is 15 times more popular with the public than is the stage.

Mexico City exhibitors were perhaps the heaviest contributors to the general shutup of practically all activities employing union workers on May 1, which was Mexico's Labor Day and perhaps the most strictly observed holiday in the country. The various labor unions turned down the exhibitors' petition that inasmuch as stage theatres, bullfights, frontons (gambling handball games) and horse races were allowed to function on that day, it wouldn't do any harm if crews were allotted to run the picture houses as well. For reasons of their own the picture house workers' unions decided that these unionists must have the whole day off to take part in parades and otherwise glorify the day set aside for paying homage to the working man and woman. As May 1 was a Sunday, the very best day of the week for the cinemas, the enforced closure was an expensive one for the exhibitors.

EXPLOITEERS WORK FULL WEEK

RKO announces to its various and sundry circuit theatre managers that in the future the exploitation department at the home office will be open and ready for business seven days each week, which takes Sunday out of the "day of rest" class for that department.

Akerson May Aid Hoover Campaign

George Akerson, Paramount executive, has been granted a leave of absence to aid in the Republican campaign next fall, according to reports brought back to Kansas City from the Paramount sales convention by members of the local delegation.

Akerson was not at his New York office this week, but a member of his staff said he had "heard nothing about it."

A dispatch to the Kansas City Star from its Washington bureau reveals Akerson's participation in the political campaign.

Kosch Named Equity Receiver For Roxy Theatres Company

Harry G. Kosch, president of the Roxy Theatres Corporation, was appointed equity receiver on Wednesday for the Roxy in New York by Federal Judge Francis G. Caffey. The action was begun by John Kane as assignee of the $10,000 claim against the theatre corporation for legal services of Sonnenschein, Berkson, Lautmann, Levinson & Morse, Chicago law firm. The petitioner stated that since Samuel (Roxy) Rothafel left the theatre in 1931, it has suffered continuous losses. Assets of the Roxy corporation are listed at $10,954,869 and liabilities at $5,660,679.

Fox Denies Deal With Curtis Indicated in His Confession

John Hughes Curtis, in a signed confession made to New Jersey police on Tuesday, admitted that his "negotiations" with "kidnapers" for the return of Colonel Charles Lindbergh's baby were all a hoax, and in the confession, Curtis mentioned two New York newspapers and Fox as having offered him money "for my knowledge of the Lindbergh case or pictures of the baby." This was denied vigorously by the Fox executives.

In the meantime, Will H. Hays has taken up the matter of the confession made by the perpetrator of the hoax insofar as the industry is tied into it.

Goldstone in New York for Product Distribution Deals

Phil Goldstone, one of the principal financers of independent production, is in New York to negotiate for distribution of independent product. While here, Goldstone conferred with executives of Majestic Pictures, the distributing organization for many of the producers being financed by Goldstone. Majestic is now engaged in selling territorial franchises for its product. Approximately 25 independent producers are receiving financing from Goldstone.

APRIL BOX OFFICE CHAMPIONS

AGAIN—in April as in March—the six "Box Office Champions" number seven—a paradox explained by the fact that the figures placed three productions in a tie for final ranking. Three were likewise "champions" in March, one of them—M-G-M's "Tarzan the Ape Man"—rising from sixth to first place. Paramount's "One Hour With You," first in March, continued strong by winning second position. First National's "Fireman Save My Child" also remained "in the money" by holding the final (in April, the fifth) position in a tie with "It's Tough to Be Famous" and with RKO Radio's "Girl Crazy." Third ranking went to First National's "Alias the Doctor," while Warner Brothers' "The Crowd Roars" took fourth.

INTERVENTION BY U. S. NEEDED, HE DECLARES

Money Now Going Into Box Offices Would Make All Prosperous If Equitably Distributed, Says A. R. Bender of Cleveland

Government intervention in any industry becomes necessary whenever participants are unable to obtain "justice" from the industry itself, declares one exhibitor in a communication to Motion Picture Herald. The exhibitor, A. R. Bender, manager of the Melba theatre at Cleveland, Okla., advocates passage of the Brookhart bill providing for a federal investigation of the industry on the assumption that no adjustment of exhibitor difficulties is forthcoming from within the industry. Rather, Bender believes, these difficulties are being increased continually.

"I have watched thousands of abuses creep into this industry in the past 20 years," he writes. "I have watched hundreds of parasites fasten themselves upon the box offices of the exhibitors, and I have watched exhibitor organizations waste the past ten or 12 years in futile efforts to bring justice and order out of chaos by so-called 'Round Table' discussions. I have watched producer-owned theatre chains throttle and destroy millions of dollars of independent theatre investments, and I have watched the 'rules of the game' gradually tighten until now the independent theatre owner is not allowed to establish his own admission price for fear it will hurt the chain-owned 'key' theatres."

"Supposed to Sit Quietly By"

"Nor," Bender continues, "is the independent exhibitor allowed to run product which he buys and for which he pays until after the 'key' theatre has reaped the harvest. The independent is supposed to sit quietly by and permit his patronage to drift into the larger town to the benefit of the chains.

"I do not favor Government intervention in any business if justice can be obtained otherwise, but if there was ever an industry which needed Government intervention, this one does. There is sufficient money going into the box offices of this country, even during these times of depression, which, if equitably distributed, would make every branch of this industry prosperous and sound.

"If half the effort expended by the producers in throttling the independent exhibitor were expended in efforts to solve the vital problems of this industry, the theatre owner, producer or star would have nothing to worry about. The problems are serious but the solution is simple—a sincere, concerted 'housecleaning' by all parties concerned will get the job done."

Cites Fox Poster Action

Bender cites the recent action of Fox Film in requesting the return of used posters and other advertising accessories to the company's exchanges as a new instance of "injustice" to independent exhibitors.

"Again," he writes, "the Fox ruling does not seriously affect the chain house, for most such theatres are located in the large towns and their advertising is done by art departments, and very little stock advertising is used. Personally, I will not submit to such 'hijacking' if I have to print my programs on the sidewalks in chalk. Furthermore, I intend to advise the public just why such a course was made necessary."

Sidney Kent, president of Fox, advised Motion Picture Herald shortly after his recent association with that company, that he would inquire into the necessity for the company's poster regulations at his earliest opportunity. Pending the outcome of that inquiry, Fox department heads concerned are refusing further official comment on the policy.

Cutting Impaired "Congress Dances," O'Sullivan Charges

To the editor of Motion Picture Herald:

In last week's issue of Motion Picture Herald I reviewed, from a musical point of view, "Congress Dances," the UFA production distributed in the United States by United Artists. My article was written after a preview of the picture and was based on the assumption that the print I saw would be identical with that to be shown on Broadway at the New York premiere.

Dropping into the Rivoli on Monday night (the picture opened on Wednesday of last week) I noted that several cuts had been made in the production after I had reviewed it in the projection room of United Artists, evidently with the idea of snapping up the action and, perforce, the music that synchronized with it. As a result of this ill-advised editing, some of the most charming moments in the production have been lamentably weakened and the intent of the intelligent producers of this distinctive musical-picture satirical concoction subverted to a mistaken idea of "speeding up" the action.

The principal cut—and the most deplorable—is in the journey of Christel, the glove-girl, from her humble shop to the sumptuous villa in the environs of Vienna. Coordinating with her triumphal drive in her carriage through the streets of Vienna and out into the country, is the lilting music of the song, "Just Once for All Time."

As I previewed the picture, this sequence through its spontaneous vivacity, its unpremeditated gayety, in which the melodious charm and rhythmic swing of the music combined with the words of the song carried the action along with a spirit that never lagged through its entire length, proved one of the most uniquely delightful episodes of its kind ever shown on the screen. Without music this joyous journey might probably weary some of our impatient audiences, on account of its length. But with the music, it took on the aspect of a rollicking romantic adventure in which a certain amount of tonal reiteration was absolutely necessary in order to achieve a cumulative effect. It was a splendid example of the power of music to "give impetus, color and significance" to visual action that might otherwise appear innocuous. But in the "edited" print shown at the Rivoli a slice is taken right out of the middle of this sequence, throwing a "wet blanket" on the spirit of the festive affair just as it gets into full swing and before the music has had a chance to register completely. As a consequence, this entire sequence falls short of my appraisal as one which "translates to the audience the emotional content, while sublimating visual motion into motivating action." As a matter of plain fact, the whole sequence falls rather flat, which is certainly an injustice to the producers of the picture.

Another unwarranted bit of editing since my review of the production is in a quarrel scene between the secretary of Metternich and Christel. She makes an assertion; he makes a negative assertion. She repeats; he repeats the same words in an emphatic rhythm, several times. This reiteration establishes a strong rhythmic effect after the fifth or sixth repetition, which is finally taken up by the music of a brass band heard playing in the distance. This is a clever bit of rhythmic-tonal evolution also used later in the picture. But the film editor saw fit to eliminate some of the repetitions of words, thereby killing the rhythmic feeling established and taken up by the music of the band. There are some other cuts made from the original that reveal the lack of understanding of the producer's ideas and methods.

It seems strange that such a fine production as the original print of "Congress Dances" showed it to be, should be meddled with in a useless attempt to "speed it up."

It has been a pleasure for me to review this picture. But before submitting any musical reviews on pictures for publication in the Motion Picture Herald, I must be assured that the print from which I write the review is identical with the print shown in the New York theatre.

Respectfully,
JOSEPH O'SULLIVAN.

This expression from Mr. Joseph O'Sullivan concerning the adventures, and mishaps, of "Congress Dances," a German masterpiece, in an American cutting room, reminds us that this sort of thing has been happening between the artist and the theatre for quite a while. One William Shakespeare had a handsome piece entitled "Henry VIII." They happened to need a curtain raiser for the show that week and proceeded to cut it to the time requirements, resulting in a piece with one act of excellent drama and a finish in a gust of unutterable horsefeathers and tommyrot. In these days when good music needs all the screen encouragement that it can get, and when good music can confer some important status upon the picture screen, it is most unfortunate to have profane scissors laid on such a production. The result to the musically erudite is about as pleasant as the optical consequences of sawing off part of a stained glass window.—

DOUBLE FEATURING IS PROHIBITED BY ACTION OF GERMAN PRODUCERS

Fine Will Be Imposed in Each Case of Violation; Producers Also Endorse Present Quota Law With Added Restrictions

By HANS TINTNER, Berlin

In a meeting of greatest importance the German film producers have defined their position regarding the two vital questions of the day, namely the double feature programs and the contingent problem. Energetic measures have been decided upon in both matters.

The Motion Picture Producers Association of Germany is of the opinion that the decrease in the theatre receipts is to a great extent attributable to the ruinous policy of double featuring, and resolutions have been passed to bar the second feature by forcing the producers to fix a conventional fine for the showing of a second feature.

In reply to an inquiry of the Home Office regarding the position of the Motion Picture Producers Association concerning the future regulation of the import of foreign pictures, it was recommended to the Government to maintain the present quota law with the following additional regulations:

> The showing and releasing of foreign pictures in the German language dubbed outside of Germany shall be prohibited.
> Foreign pictures dubbed in Germany shall be considered as foreign films, as heretofore.
> Only one-fifth of the dubbed foreign films shall be admitted, provided that the pictures have been dubbed in Germany.

Furthermore, a new regulation is to be issued, according to which pictures from countries which put duties or taxes of any kind on the import or releasing of German films shall be subject to the same taxes in Germany.

France First To Set Limit

France has been the first country limiting the import of dubbed films. According to the French regulations, dubbed versions in the French language shall be admitted only, if the post-synchronization was made in France. This regulation has had the effect that the foreign companies have made Paris the center of their synchronization work on European versions.

The new German regulations are aimed to prevent German actors and directors from being engaged for foreign countries with large salaries in such a way as to evade the economy measures of the German producers.

Furthermore, the production cost of these post-synchronizations which are produced to get money out of the German market shall be spent in Germany.

With regard to the double feature system, the Motion Picture Producers Association has passed the following resolution:

"The Motion Picture Producers Association realizes clearly at this time of serious economic depression that the German film industry will go to ruin if the double feature system adopted by many theatre owners is maintained.

Fight Double Features

The Association also has decided as follows:

1. To fight against the double feature system with all means possible;
2. To approach the studio owners and the companies granting sound licenses on a basis of being granted production rights only if the producer binds himself to rent the licensed sound film as a single feature for release without a second feature and if he also agrees to impose the same obligation on his customers (distributors and exhibitors);
3. The carrying out of the measures mentioned in paragraph 2 shall be guaranteed by a conventional fine in each individual case;
4. The Motion Picture Producers Association shall impose on its members the duty to make no further contracts with distributors who do not include the clause guaranteed by the conventional fine that the film will be released as a single feature without a second feature.
5. It shall make no difference whether the second feature to be released is a foreign or a domestic production.

The board of directors has been commissioned with the execution of these measures.

The German film producers have thoroughly discussed all possibilities still open for further reduction of production costs. A special committee has been appointed for the reduction of salaries, which shall examine and handle all questions in this direction.

American film companies operating in Germany have not joined in the action against the double feature programs. It is presumed in the circles of the Film Producers Association that the American companies will take interest in a joint action against the double feature programs only after a new regulation of the Kontingent law which is more favorable to them.

PICTURE STARS ENJOY THEMSELVES

Motion picture stars are their own greatest admirers, according to the Hays organization poll of public tastes and preferences in the matter of types of films most desired. The census seems to indicate that the best known players of the screen attend the film theatre assiduously, first for entertainment and relaxation, again for an opportunity to examine their work and that of others, with a mind to improvement in their performances. Their preferences are very highly diversified, according to the poll, with very nearly every possible category of film represented in a list of the types from which they say they obtain their greatest enjoyment.

Canadian Contract Strikes Obstacle; Parties Deadlock

For a time it looked as if the new standard exhibition contract for Canada was all ready to be signed, sealed and delivered but the breach between exhibitors and distributors now seems to be wider than ever before insofar as contract matters are concerned.

Three clauses have caused the uproar. One of these provides for the passing on by the exchange to the exhibitor of any new film taxation. Another provides for local checkers on percentage pictures and the third would make the exhibitor responsible for the loss of prints unless he proves that he was not negligent or careless with the distributor's property. The split is so pronounced at the moment that there are promises that the distributors in Canada will draw up their own contract forms for individual theatres or, perhaps, the present contract will be continued indefinitely.

Allied Exhibitors of Ontario has taken strong objection to the taxation clause in the proposed form, declaring it is too indefinite and forms too much of a loophole for future complications. Moreover, the exhibitors in small centers do not want the local banker or newspaperman appointed to check up on percentages, preferring to have an outsider. The negligence clause is not quite so important but it has its disadvantages, the exhibitors say.

428 Houses Built in Europe During 1931; 12,500 Wired

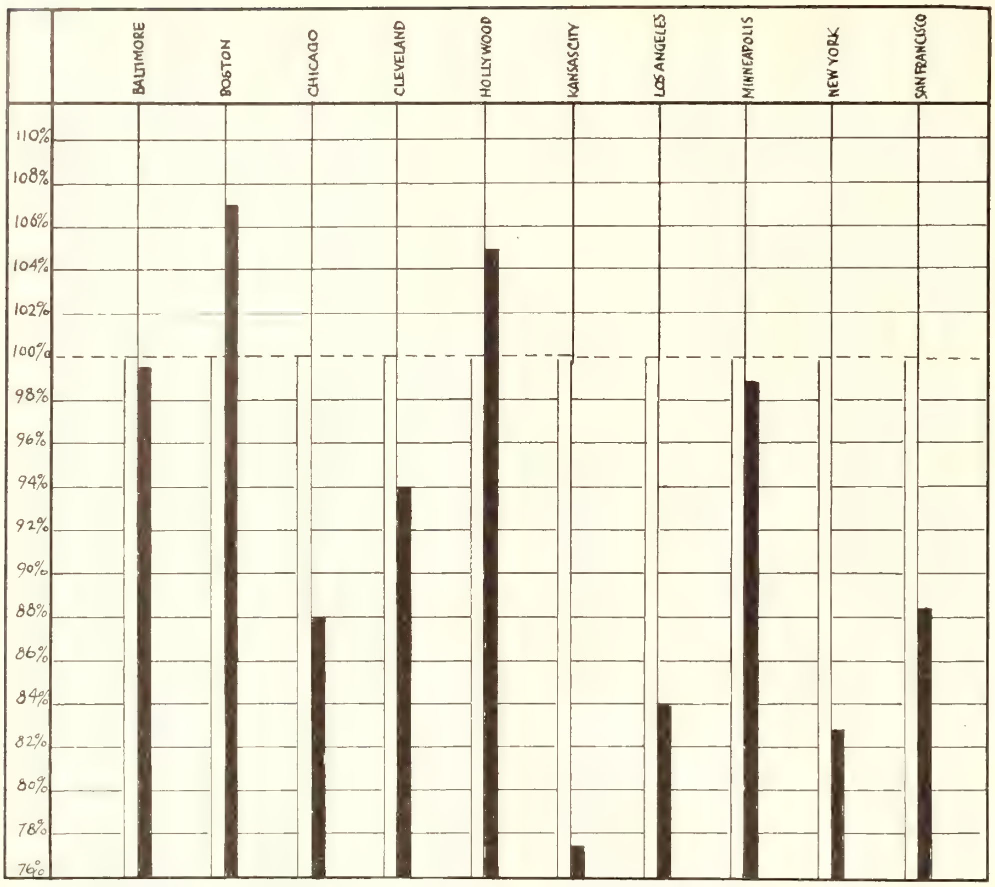
Four hundred and twenty-eight picture theatres, with a capital of 341,000, were built in Europe during 1931, according to the United States department of commerce. The average seating capacity in 1931 was 796, which compares with 864 in 1930.

The increase in 1931 over 1930 was 55 houses and a seating capacity of 18,874. Excluding Soviet Russia, 12,500 houses had been wired for sound at the end of 1931. It is estimated that during the year 5,350 film theatres were equipped for sound.

Says American Films Exceed British Import in Australia

Approximately 70 English-made films will be brought to Australia next season, as compared to between 300 and 350 American films, according to N. Bernard Freeman, M-G-M Australian representative, who left for Sydney last week, stopping at the Coast studio en route.

Freeman said the tastes of American and Australian audiences are much alike. He believes a closer relationship exists between this country and Australia in that respect than between America and England.



Box office receipts of ten cities are compared in the graph, compiled from the HERALD'S weekly reports of returns at the theatres. The white bar represents the average weekly gross for each city in 1931. The black bar shows the average weekly gross for each city for the ten week period of March 5 to May 7 in 1932.

TRADE-MARKS—A SURVEY

10.8 per cent of the men, and only 3.2 per cent of the women.

Trade marks have not had a large influence in the world of motion picture. They have been decreasingly important down the years as the industry has evolved from the volume production of the early nickelodeon days into the feature era and the production and selling of individual pictures. Tremendous effort has at times been made to establish brand values, and with some passing effect, but little permanent impress. In the very early days the public did pay heed to the "AB" or American Biograph mark, but soon transferred its attention to players who became in a very special sense the real trade marks of the industry, evolving into stars despite the restrictive efforts of the hardhanded pioneers.

In strictly trade, rather than public terms, trade marks survived for nearly ten years of the photoplay. General Film Company's Little General and Carl Laemmle's "Imp" were early trade marks of importance, within the trade rather than with the public. The John R. Freuler-Harry Aitken promotion, the Mutual Film Corporation, first went to the public with a trade mark in other than screen and poster media, with a campaign in the Saturday Evening Post and elsewhere devoted to the once famous "Winged Clock," inscribed with "Mutual Movies Make Time Fly." Various other concerns, hoping at the swift building of prestige in support of promotions, tried similar campaigns.

The Mutual's "Winged Clock" was the sole masterpiece and entire advertising career of the youth who evolved it. He was a relative of an important brewer advertiser in Chicago, which connection placed him in a job with the then flourishing Nicholas-Finn advertising agency. The lad absorbed atmosphere around the agency for some months. When the agency posted a prize contest to the staff for a movie trademark the novice drew the clock and won. The clock got wide distribution in the last years of the nickelodeon era.

Paramount was the first to devote a long sustained and continued campaign in national media. One of the incidental results is seen today in the fact that the advertising agency, casting about for twenty-five trade symbols for the purposes of this survey, thought only of Paramount, among motion picture hallmarks.

The Paramount trademark was evolved, created and drawn by W. W. Hodkinson, the organizer of Paramount as a distributing concern for Famous Players, Lasky, Bosworth and other like product, in the formative years of the feature era, which is to say about 1913-14. One morning in those strenuous days Mr. Hodkinson was riding from uptown New York in a taxi and chanced to see a sign on a new building—"Paramount Apartments." He liked the word. Also he liked vastly those Rocky Mountains of the big Utah and northwest country where he took his rise. When confronted with the necessity of a trademark for the concern he puzzled long and in the process idly drew a mountain, a real Paramountain on a blotter and presently rimmed it with stars. The blotter drawing became the symbol of the company and its successors and assigns to date. It will likely remain so, for no artist has yet been found who knows how to draw a Publix.

With the coming of sound and the increasing trend toward making every picture an individual product trade mark has become less and less a factor. The trade mark as an instrument of merchandising assumes standardization, and standardization is not, it seems, good box office.

United Artists To Release 18 Mickey Mouse Cartoons

United Artists will release 18 of the Mickey Mouse animated cartoon shorts, produced by Walt Disney, annually, instead of the 12 heretofore distributed each season by Columbia. The new contract, signed several months ago, between Disney and United Artists, provides for the increased output.

The animated series, which has achieved an unmistakable popularity on the screen, received a wide endorsement in the recent Hays organization preference poll.

DETROIT ALLIED JOINS DUAL FEATURE FIGHT

Michigan Unit in Petition Proposes Limitation of Policy Starting July 1; Kansas City Also Seeks Public's Opinion

Following by one week similar action taken by theatre owners at Kansas City, exhibitors are endeavoring to get together for the abolition of dual features, a practice which is branded as an "evil" of operation in both cities.

Allied Theatres of Michigan is endeavoring to deliver the death blow to double bills in Detroit and possibly throughout Michigan by asking members to sign an agreement to drop the policy after July 1. The agreement is in the form of a petition and is being circulated among exhibitors. Practically all approached have signed, according to H. M. Richey, general manager of the Allied unit.

Double features were condemned in the form of a resolution at the national Allied convention in Detroit last March. However, little has been done to abandon the practice and the Detroit move is one of the first activities on the matter by any of the Allied units. According to local exchanges at Detroit, 75 per cent of those who agree to drop the two-feature plan will live up to what they have signed. Nevertheless, the action of the Allied unit is being watched with interest and if it is successful the idea may be tried by Allied in other cities.

Text of Petition

Following is the petition which is being circulated in Michigan:

"We, the undersigned, exhibitors of Detroit and vicinity being desirous of ending the double bill menace, realizing that it will eventually be detrimental to our business, do hereby mutually agree:

"1. To stop double billing, except as hereinafter provided, effective July 1, 1932.

"2. Not to double bill any pictures on Sundays or holidays.

"3. To double bill pictures which are designated as double bill pictures on only one change a week.

"4. To abide by the decision of a committee consisting of one representative of Allied, one representative of the affiliated theatres and one exchange man, as to which pictures are not to be double billed.

"5. To permit a rubber-stamp clause to be inserted on our contracts with the exchanges prohibiting double billing except under these conditions, and

"6. To stop, and the practice is prohibited of running double shows for midnights for the same admission—i.e., two features on the regular show plus the next day's attraction which is strictly forbidden and which we agree not to do, and

"7. To abide by this penalty prescribed to prevent a violation of this agreement that in case an exhibitor violates this agreement he agrees to permit the exchange to automatically set back his bookings twenty-eight (28) days, regardless of the protection provision on his contract, for a period of one month's bookings for each offense."

Petitions at Kansas City

At Kansas City, theatre owners who have protested against double featuring to national distributors and circuits, are continuing with their efforts to rid the territory of the practice. Fox Theatres, operated by Skouras and against which vigorous protests were made by independents opposing a dual policy, is circulating petitions among patrons in the outlying districts of Kansas City in an endeavor to obtain their expressions regarding the policy. Early returns are said to indicate a completely antagonistic feeling by theatregoers, although no results have been made known as yet by the Fox-Skouras interests.

According to Henry Ginsberg, Hollywood producer, "the double feature in reality is an example of impulsive showmanship, giving no thought to its future as an institution of entertainment. Double featuring has further hurt the juvenile trade—it gave them more feature-length films, but excluded its chief hold on children, the comedy.

"The showing of double features is on the wane. It bettered the theatre receipts for a short period, then overfed the public, taking from them a most important theatre policy, namely, diversified entertainment. This is now recognized and from present observation the double feature will practically become extinct within the next year."

A return to the single feature policy in Chicago is seen in some quarters as imminent, as a result of exhibitor leader conferences looking toward an improvement of the business situation. Discussions involving Jack Miller, head of the Exhibitors' Association; Aaron Saperstein, Chicago Allied president, and Floyd Brockell, head of the Midwest Booking Circuit were principally concerned with the double feature conditions, prevalent in the city, it is understood.

Balaban and Katz, foremost circuit, recently indicated the trend toward the single feature by changing the Roosevelt to a Class C house and reducing the admission from 85 cents to 35 cents. The RKO State-Lake followed the B & K move with a similar reduction. In the neighborhoods Warner has acted with a single feature policy and reduced admission at the Avalon. Balaban & Katz, long reported as the stumbling block to the desire of independents for a return to the single feature, is generally considered open minded on the situation at the moment.

Stockholders of Agfa Ansco To Vote on Refunding Plan

Holders of common and preferred stock of Agfa Ansco Corporation, manufacturers of cameras and photographic supplies, have received a plan, submitted by a committee named by the directors, which calls for refunding indebtedness, increased working capital and readjustment of the capital structure. Through the sale of new stock the company expect to raise $2,886,000.

The plan provides for the reduction in liabilities through the sale of common stock and the extension of a current liability for six years; for lowering annual fixed interest charges on note indebtedness. Holders of the present preferred stock will receive new common at four shares of new for each one of preferred, according to the plan.

circumstances, of entertainment as necessary to their souls as bread and butter to their bodies." Joe Schenck said: "There are now 5,000 theatres closed. The proposed legislation would double this number, cause curtailment of studio activity, increase unemployment." Ben Schulberg declared: "The move threatens the very foundations of the entire industry." Richard Rowland said: "The 10 cent admission tax will weaken an already weak financial structure and rob the industry of its incentive."

A statement from national headquarters of Allied States Association in Washington indicates that "everything is being done to 'up' the exemption up to and including 50 cents."

Various exhibitor organizations and independent and circuit operators have been at work in an effort to impress congressmen with the threatening unfavorable economic reaction in the theatre field if the tax is passed in its present form.

Harry Huffman, of Denver, president of the Rocky Mountain Theatre Owners Association, says at least 100, or one-third, of the theatres operating in the Rocky Mountain region will be forced to close if the proposed 10 per cent tax is passed.

Proposed Massachusetts Tax Brings Warnings

Proposals of Governor Joseph H. Ely of Massachusetts for a special tax on amusements, beverages and tobacco for the benefit of the commonwealth are meeting with strong opposition by the several interests involved, augmented by allied industries which would be seriously affected by such taxes, and by many of the public.

It is generally stated that approximately 10 per cent of the gross receipts would be required by the taxes proposed.

Major General Edward L. Logan, representing the Allied Theatres, said the measure would mean the closing of many more theatres in the state. He pointed out the already large number of theatres already dark and warned that if more theatres were closed, thousands more would be thrown out of work. He further pointed out the loss to allied industries, such as the electric companies, the musicians, the transportation companies and others.

Nathan Yamins of Fall River, head of the Independent Theatre Owners, said such a tax would spell ruin for many independent theatres. There has been a flood of letters and telegrams from the public protesting the move.

DEFENSE IMPOSSIBLE IF SALACIOUS FILMS REMAIN, BRITISH ARE TOLD

Committee of British Exhibitors Association Says It Welcomes the Censor's Determination To Be Even More Strict

By WM. H. MOORING, London

During the past year, the anti-cinema activities of British vigilance societies, and the like, have intensified, to increasing general alarm throughout the motion picture industry. The Cinematograph Exhibitors Association, under pressure from its Manchester branch, appointed a special propaganda committee to investigate the situation and report upon methods to be adopted in trade defense. At the present time, there is in existence in Great Britain no central trade organization for defense work of this kind or for general publicity or propaganda.

The Cinematograph Exhibitors Association committee has thrown a bombshell by reporting to the General Council of its association that "it does not think that any individual or any committee can overtake the criticisms which come upon this motion picture business when there is an unusual number of salacious films, or films, if not actually salacious, having an excessive amount of sexuality about them, and for that reason it welcomes the recent declaration by the British Censor as to his determination to be more rigid in certain directions."

Starting Point for Attack

In some quarters this honest admission is interpreted as conceding a potent weapon to the many organizations at present working against the industry. In reality it is probably the best starting point for a real attack on current censorship problems which lie at the root of the present wave of anti-cinema influence. The report is not aimed specifically at American pictures, but takes cognizance of the increasing tendency on the part of motion picture producers to exploit unpleasant aspects of the sex theme.

Once having set its own house in order, the trade could and should immediately organize in Great Britain an effective propaganda and defense force, to take up the challenge of those critics of the cinema who would rather see all theatres closed than cleansed.

Two well known provincial exhibitors, John Harrison of Manchester and S. K. Lewis of Birmingham, are the prime movers in an agitation growing among members of the C. E. A. for a more effective association policy to mould public opinion on cinema matters.

"Shameful Slackness" Cited

An illustration of the shameful slackness of the British cinema industry has been provided in the House of Commons recently. A new bill to legalize Sunday opening on a basis recognized and operated illegally for the past 25 years, was virtually "killed" on its second reading in the House of Commons, simply because M. P.s had been intimidated by the superior propaganda methods of Sabbatarian opposition to the bill. The bill finally was actually defeated.

While the cinema industry merely issued one official letter to each M. P., the Sabbatarians organized petitions and postcard deluges from all the constituencies and succeeded thereby in impressing M.P.s that there might be a preponderance of public opinion against the legalization of Sunday entertainment. Now a new bill has been framed.

The "No Budge" Budget

The film industry probably more than any other British business save perhaps the brewers' will have cause to dub the new budget introduced by Neville Chamberlain the "No Budge" Budget, for although cinemas have provided figures to prove losses of 150 millions a year in numbers of cinema attendances, since the new entertainment tax started, no relief is afforded. The heavy tax, equal to 16 2/3 per cent of all takings, is to remain. Nor is general taxation relieved in the least, though national revenue has exceeded £731 millions. The tax remission campaign ends without so much as leaving a verbal acknowledgment from the Chancellor that the entertainment tax is too high.

Bainbridge Colby Addresses Club

Bainbridge Colby, secretary of state in President Wilson's cabinet, addressed the Motion Picture Club of New York at its weekly luncheon forum, this week. Colby, speaking extemporaneously, touched on a variety of current topics and manifestations of the times.

Colby said he observes "a new, serious passion" in the thinking of the American public of today, and indicated that he hoped motion picture producers would recognize and serve it with suitable productions.

"I like motion pictures," he said, "and I feel that I have been entertained and have profited by them when I see them—although I do not visit them incessantly, as do some of my friends."

Colby suggested that there were dramatic possibilities in the life of George Washington which would contribute to good motion picture material. Lee A. Ochs, president of the club, who has been absent from New York for the past several weeks, returned in time to preside at this week's session.

RKO Home Office Expense Is Cut $12,000 Weekly: Franklin

A total reduction of $12,000 per week in home office overhead at RKO has already been effected without the discharge of a single employee, Harold B. Franklin, head of the theatre circuit, said on his return to New York this week from a hurried Coast trip.

130 at Columbia Regional Session

Over 130 executives and members of the sales force and the home office will be present at the Ambassador hotel, Atlantic City, on Sunday when Columbia's Eastern convention opens for a four-day session. This is the first of two regional meetings, the second to be held in Los Angeles beginning May 31.

The first meeting at each convention will be devoted to a discussion of sales policies, followed by sessions at which 1932-33 product will be outlined. The third day will be occupied with publicity, advertising, exploitation and sales promotion plans and the convention will wind up with special conferences between the general sales manager and each individual branch manager to discuss local problems affecting each territory.

Jack Cohn, vice president and treasurer, will officially open the meeting which will feature addresses by Charles Rosenzweig, sales manager; Abe Schneider, assistant secretary and treasurer, and Abe Montague. Others who will address the delegates are George Brown, director of advertising and publicity; Rube Jackter, assistant sales manager; J. Safron, sales supervisor; Hal Hodes, sales promotion manager; Lou Weinberg; Henri Brunet, manager of exchange operations; M. Hannock, S. Liggett, head of the non-theatrical division, Wm. The Orpheum Circuit statement shows loss from operations for the quarter of $375,705.67, which is added to the depreciation figure of $319,000.73 to bring the total net loss to $694,706.40. The Keith statement shows profit total of $300,111.76, with $250,282.68 from operations and $49,829.08 from other sources. Depreciation is written down at $364,957.27.

Voluptuous Scenes Foisted by Producers Bankrupt of Ideas, J. Ames Hare of Bangor, Wales, Writes to HERALD

Way overseas at Bangor in Wales Mr. J. Ames Hare, an exhibitor reader of Motion Picture Herald, conducts the County Theatre, playing to a substantial community. With an alert interest in his business Mr. Hare has an acute eye on the American production and its promises. Like other showmen the world over, he finds that today presents him with not a few problems and that very considerably those problems are related to product and its point of view. In the accompanying article he presents some findings and opinions, and some hopes.—THE EDITOR.

By J. AMES HARE

What is wrong with our Kinemas today that our patrons are leaving us in an ever-increasing stream?

With the finest technicians, unexcelled directors, and the pick of the world's actors and actresses, American films are, to a larger extent than ever before, failing to draw the public.

I have read countless excuses and reasons for this admitted fact—the world depression—the wearing off of the novelty of talkies—and so forth, but none of them to my mind hits upon the actual basic cause—weak, ill-chosen stories.

Interesting Story Draws

I have always found that a really holding, interesting story—even when poorly produced and acted—draws more people to the box-office than the most lavishly produced "super" which lacks this essential element.

"The play's the thing" is a truism, which, I fear, many of your producing companies have failed to realize. When one thinks of the untapped wealth of literature available to choose from, it is truly amazing to me that so much time and money should be wasted on the banal trivialities which serve as plots for many of our present day pictures.

In my opinion, dull uninteresting stories are responsible for nine-tenths of the uncertain hold of the kinema today. I don't know who is responsible for the choice of stories but I suggest that it's time the exhibitors themselves had a say about the subjects to be produced.

Wants Worthwhile Stories

Most of them, I have no doubt, are playgoers and novel readers, and well able to gauge the suitability or otherwise of a story for transference to the screen. Cut out the light, frothy flippancies, the worn-out old melodramas, the desert island "romance," and let us have some real, worthwhile stories and every exhibitor will be able to look his bank manager in the face once more.

It isn't we who desire to show displays of feminine underwear, boring mannequin parades, and voluptuous ladies in all stages of their toilet—these things are foisted on us by producers bankrupt of ideas.

Let us get back to the healthy stories of adventure, of decent men and women who did things to improve the world, and let us leave the erotic, "sophisticated" novel to the limited number of degenerates who find pleasure in such things.

Geller Holds Conferences

Louis Geller, president of Peerless, independent company, is holding conferences this week on future product, at his Hollywood headquarters.

Warner Is Ready to Replace Insurgents

Warner pointed out, in a statement this week, that the insurgent demands of James Cagney, star who has left Hollywood, will not alter production plans, since young players are continuously being groomed for starring roles to fill in unexpected gaps. "Blessed Event," originally scheduled for Cagney, is now in production with Lee Tracy in the Cagney role.

Cagney has sold his home in Hollywood, and with Mrs. Cagney, plans a European trip and vaudeville tour. Prior to his departure, the former Warner star said: "I feel that I have given the best years of my life working for inadequate compensation. My employers can't see my way so I'm through." He said he plans to write a book when he returns to this country, and will "turn seriously to the study of medicine."

George Arliss, prior to sailing for Europe last week, voluntarily accepted a reduction in salary, stating that he believed it the duty of every one connected with the industry to do his bit to help at this time. H. M. Warner, president, lauded Arliss' offer.

Hagemann, in Senate Race, Throws Gage to Brookhart

F. P. Hagemann, an exhibitor for 15 years and an attorney-at-law at Waverly, Iowa, is a candidate for United States senator from Iowa on the Democratic ticket in the primaries June 6.

Hagemann, unalterably opposed to Government meddling in private business, has taken direct issue with Senator Smith Wildman Brookhart, Republican candidate for re-election, who advocates federal regulation of the motion picture industry. "We need less governmental interference and more cooperation," Mr. Hagemann said in his letter to the editor of Motion Picture Herald, published in the issue of March 12.

Baseball League Under Way

Paramount Changes Value of Its Stock

At an adjourned meeting of Paramount Publix Corporation held last week, stockholders voted to change the stock from no par to par value of $10 each. The session was brief.

Ralph A. Kohn, treasurer of the company, who was elected chairman of the meeting in the absence of the President, Adolph Zukor, who is on the coast, stated to the stockholders that this change in the capital structure of the company would create a substantial corporate surplus and would also reduce substantially the amount of revenue stamps required to be put on certificates when they are sold by stockholders. The resolution to change the stock was approved by stockholders owning 2,309,459 shares and stockholders owning 46 shares voted against it.

Paramount has delivered to the Chase National Bank as trustees $750,000 par value of its 5½% sinking fund debentures, for cancellation June 1, under sinking fund requirements. This reduces the total amount outstanding to $13,500,000, from an original issue of $15,000,000.

The officers and executives of Paramount have decided on a policy of readjusting the losses of all employes in stock purchased through the corporation and also on a policy of profit sharing for all employes as soon as general business conditions permit.

Streimer Ad-Service Moves

Streimer Ad-Service, distributors of theatrical premiums, announce through Charles Streimer, their general sales manager, that their new headquarters are at 352 West 44th street. The increase of exhibitor interest in the particular novelties distributed by Streimer necessitated expansion.

Benjamin DeCasseres, who comments on the screen potentialities of current stage offerings in Motion Picture Herald, and J. Clarkson Miller, veteran scenarist, have formed a partnership to engage in the treatment of films, covering scenario, dialogue or other phases.

COPYRIGHT ROYALTIES STATE TAX UPHELD

Argument of Privilege Insufficient to Warrant Exemption, U.S. Supreme Court Holds in Fox Suit; Sirovich Rewrites Bill

Royalties from copyright are not immune from taxation by the states as instrumentalities of the United States, it was held May 16 by the United States Supreme Court in affirming a decision of the Georgia Supreme Court holding constitutional the state tax upon the gross receipts from the licensing of copyrighted motion pictures.

Suit to restrain the collection of the state tax was brought by Fox Film Corporation on the ground that copyrights are instrumentalities of the United States and, as such, immune from state taxation.

The copyright law, it was declared by Chief Justice Hughes in delivering the opinion of the court, confers certain rights upon the author but "in creating this right, the Congress did not reserve to the United States any interest in the production itself, or in the copyright, or in the profits that may be derived from its use. Nor did the Congress provide that the right, or the gains from its exercise, should be free of tax."

Franchise Argument Insufficient

The mere fact that a copyright is property derived from a grant by the United States is insufficient to support the claim of exemption, the court held. "The argument that it is in the nature of a franchise or privilege bestowed by the Government is met by the fact that it is not a franchise or privilege to be exercised on behalf of the Government or in performing a function of the Government," the Chief Justice continued.

"Copyright is a right exercised by the owner during the term at his pleasure and exclusively for his own profit and forms the basis for extensive and profitable business enterprises. * * * After the copyright has been granted the Government has no interest in any action under it save the general one that its laws shall be obeyed. Operations of the owner in multiplying copies, in sales, in performances or exhibitions, or in licensing others for such purposes, are manifestly not the operations of the Government. A tax upon the gains derived from such operations is not a tax upon the exertion of any governmental functions.

"The nature and purpose of copyrights place them in a distinct category and we are unable to find any basis for the supposition that a nondiscriminatory tax on royalties hampers in the slightest degree the execution of the policy of the copyright statute."

Sirovich Efforts Fail

Efforts of Representative Sirovich of New York, chairman of the House of Representatives patents committee at Washington, to "modernize" Congress' methods of handling copyright legislation—like Vice President Dawes' efforts to reform the Senate—have failed signally and months of work on the part of the committee and the various interested industries have been thrown into the discard.

This was made evident last week when, after hearing his copyright bill excoriated by members of his own committee, Dr. Sirovich introduced a new measure containing only skeletal provisions, and called a series of new hearings.

A significant feature of the new bill is the omission of provisions in the former measure covering unauthorized exhibition of a motion picture, the penalty for which was to be such statutory damages as the court might deem just but not less than $150 nor more than $10,000 for all infringements up to the date of suit.

The new version, however, does include a provision that "any assignment, license, or other disposition by the owner of a copyrighted motion picture of the right to exhibit such picture in any theatre shall include the right to reproduce any and all sound recorded on the same film as the picture, or on discs accompanying and synchronized with such pictures; and no owner of a copyrighted motion picture shall license the exhibition thereof unless at the time of such license he possesses the authority to license the reproduction of all dialogue, sound and music synchronized with such picture."

RKO-NBC Deal to Find Stage Talent

The RKO vaudeville department will in the future have a representative, in the person of Chester Stratton, at the National Broadcasting Company booking offices, to keep in close contact with newly developing radio talent. The move is the result of an arrangement entered into between the two companies.

The deal is noted as the first actual working operation developed between RKO and NBC, outside of executive circles. John F. Royal, in charge of all talent for NBC, was chiefly responsible for the arrangement. The purpose of the maneuver is the possible discovery of performers sufficiently able to carry over into the RKO circuit in regular vaudeville engagements.

RCA Demonstrates Television Progress to Radio Licensees

The Radio Corporation of America on Monday demonstrated to its licensees experimental work in television reception. About 100 executives and engineers, representing some 50 radio set and tube manufacturers, were present.

Radio engineers indicated that television can best be brought into practical application on its own band of ultra short waves, thereby providing ultimately a service additional to the established service of sound broadcasting.

Allied Unit Asks MPTO to Explain

The Allied Theatre Owners of Iowa and Nebraska, unit of Allied States Association, has addressed a letter to E. Van Hyning, president of the MPTO of Kansas and Missouri, MPTOA affiliate, asking clarification of Van Hyning's recent efforts to renew zoning scheduled in the Kansas territory.

The letter asks: "Is the request . . . asked by independent exhibitors, or is it requested by a committee composed of chain theatres and producers?" The letter further asks whether Van Hyning's organization is deriving its entire support from independent exhibitors or from chain and affiliated theatres.

The letter continues: "If your move is a sincere move on behalf of the independent exhibitors, why not go a step farther and publish the names of the independent exhibitors who request a continuance of the zoning and protection schedule in your territory showing that your organization is composed entirely of independent exhibitors."

$5,264,729 Loew Net for 28 Weeks

Loew's, Inc., in a financial statement just issued, shows net profit of $5,264,729 for the 28 weeks ended March 11, 1932. This compares with a net profit of $6,879,960 for a similar period ended March 13, 1931. The 1932 profit is equivalent to $3.13 per share on the common stock as compared to $4.22 for the corresponding 1931 period.

Operating profit for the 1932 period is reported at $7,965,424, from which is deducted depreciation and taxes of $2,700,695. This compares with operating profit of $9,765,410 and depreciation and taxes totaling $2,885,450 for the corresponding 28 weeks of the previous year.

The company has declared a regular quarterly dividend of 75 cents on the common stock, payable June 30 to stockholders of record June 13.

Briefs Filed in Injunction Suit

Briefs were filed last week in federal court at Madison, Wis., in the injunction suit by which nine motion picture distributors and three exhibitors are seeking to restrain the state department of agriculture and markets from interfering with film licensing contracts.

The distributors' attorneys contended in the injunction hearing that Congress has exclusive authority to control the picture business. They maintained that the film companies' business is interstate commerce, that the business involves licensing of photoplays under copyright owned by the companies, that the state statute is unconstitutional because it permits the state to rule on business methods and that the state has no jurisdiction.

"Resounding applause at the ROXY"

Here's a feature that will "get" everyone in the theatre including the ushers . . . the audience at the Roxy wept long and copiously throughout, here and there finding a good hearty laugh. Dickie Moore is the real hit of the feature."

Motion Picture Daily:

"Very well acted and directed. It was liked so much by the audience at the Roxy Theatre yesterday that they wept and laughed as the story became touching and humorous. Some patrons even went so far as to applaud the picture generously at its conclusion."

Al Sherman in the New York Morning Telegraph:

"Better than average is 'No Greater Love' . . . so well has the director handled the story and so ably has the cast played their parts that Roxy audiences freely and unashamedly give their tear ducts plenty of exercise . . . a sincere picture of better-than-the-average value . . . darned good."

CRITIC MUST GIVE PUBLIC REACTION, NOT HIS OWN, SAYS THIS EDITOR

Reviewer Should Cover Picture As Reporter Covers News Story, He Holds; Critics Clash at Kansas City

By WILLARD W. WILLIAMS

Managing Editor of The Brooklyn Times

The average managing editor of a newspaper is apt to place too little importance upon his motion picture page. Many editors do not even bother to read what the paper's critic or critics have said about the motion pictures they review. They feel that having what they considered competent people to cover the movies, they can forget about what the reviewers write.

I don't feel that way about motion picture reviews. Frankly I don't think any man or woman is so constituted that he or she can be infallible in their judgment of what the public is going to like or dislike in the way of pictures. The critic may not like a picture—I may not like it, either, for that matter, yet the fact that we don't like the picture doesn't mean that the general public isn't going to care for it.

"Five Star Final" was to my mind the best motion picture I have ever seen. Some of the newspaper people, I understand, took exception to the theme. Now suppose, as is frequently the case, I had to assign one of the younger reviewers to cover that picture, and that critic, filled with pride in the newspaper profession, and being not entirely familiar with the phases of yellow journalism, was so filled with indignation at what he thought was an attack upon all reputable papers, that his judgment became warped and his review became, not a true report of the picture, of how the audience reacted to it, but his answer to what he considered an attack on his personal profession.

Even with the older reviewers on the staff of the Brooklyn Times, I carefully read their report on a picture before it goes into the paper. No picture, in my mind, is so bad that it is entirely devoid of entertainment. I do not believe that any motion picture producer is going to spend upward of $200,000 upon a film unless the story has some value. I have noticed that pictures that were panned by the critics drew great crowds to the theatre, while in other cases the pictures that had been hailed by the critics as superb screen entertainment, because of a lofty ideal incorporated in the story, or because it had a plot that few could understand, proved duds when it came to attracting the movie fans.

I believe that a movie critic should cover a picture in much the same way as a reporter covers a news story. He should give the facts, should dig below the surface, and report the reaction of the audience. A comedy that will stampede a theatre into gales of laughter is a great comedy, even though the critic failed to be moved by the comedy. Perhaps he doesn't care for low-brow comedy, or joke in a picture. Perhaps he has been seeing too many pictures, or has seen a star such as Joe E. Brown, Ruth Chatterton, James Cagney or Edward G. Robinson, in so many pictures that he has lost his taste for the star. Whatever may be the cause for his not reacting the way the audience does, the fact remains that the audience did like the picture and gave concrete evidence that they did. That is what the critic should report.

WILLARD W. WILLIAMS

He should bear in mind that in covering a film he should do so from the viewpoint of an audience. His own personal likes and dislikes for film entertainment must be subordinated.

That, I maintain to my staff, is the proper way to cover a picture.

Critics Clash on "Scandal for Sale"

An indication of the wide variance of the attitude of newspaper critics to motion pictures and their reactions to films with a newspaper theme was revealed last week in Kansas City when Universal's "Scandal for Sale" was the attraction at the RKO Mainstreet.

John C. Moffitt, who classes himself as a "highbrow," pans the picture mercilessly in the Kansas City Star. On the other hand, Lowell Lawrance, critic on the Journal-Post, the city's other daily newspaper, gives "Scandal for Sale" his approval.

Lawrance says the picture has a "ring of authenticity."

"'Scandal for Sale' cannot compare to 'The Front Page' and 'Five Star Final' for powerful drama of the press," he finds. "But it ranks well above several other newspaper stories that have been filmed recently. Because it was written by a man who knows what he is talking about, we consider it one of the important denouncements of yellow journalism."

"Scandal for Sale" is based on the novel "Hot News" by Emile Gauvreau, former managing editor of the New York Mirror, now managing editor of the Detroit Mirror.

No Picture So Bad As To Be Entirely Devoid of Entertainment, Declares Willard W. Williams of Brooklyn Times

Not Authentic, Says Moffitt

Moffitt finds the picture far from authentic.

"As far as entertainment standards are concerned, we feel impelled to call this a well-made picture and the results of a competent scenario," he wrote in his review. "But we wish to say a great deal about what lies behind it.

"The film exhibits a publisher who is a nasty-minded moron, a managing editor who becomes involved in a dirty scandal and a drunken, unprincipled reporter whose profession betrays him to his death.

"For two years now, the movies have been ever so daring and thrillingly sophisticated by holding up to public scorn the alleged shortcomings of the newspaper profession. The press has taken all this in a sporting manner. You can search these columns without finding any screams of denial at the suggestion that there are newspaper men who behave irrationally in the throes of their profession or that all members of the Fourth Estate are not disciples of Carrie Nation. We have been willing to admit and even applaud a certain amount of satire.

"Tired of Harping"

"But we are getting pretty tired of a harping on this theme that amounts to the libel of an institution and a group of workers that on the whole strives honestly to make America a little better than it would be without them. So far as the movies are concerned you would think no one but Peeping Toms and highbinders are carrying reporters' cards. The impression of such debunking is not honest and, if it were, the movies are not the persons to throw rocks directed at glass pressrooms.

"We do not feel this carnival of libel has been excused when some doddering incompetent is introduced as a representative of ethical journalism, as is the case here.

"There is no American institution that could so readily be debunked as the motion picture industry, or that needs it half so much. If this libel of the press continues and the producers show themselves so vitally interested in journalism, it might be well for the journalists to give them journalism and apply its alleged talent of ruthless reporting to the movies themselves. Such work might turn up scenario material.

"All these things may not condemn the picture in the eyes of audiences. They are not mentioned with an eye toward injuring the Mainstreet's business, because the Mainstreet is selling this libel through no fault of its own. However, they are things that go into the complex relationships of the movies and they should be pointed out."

PASSING IN REVIEW

The department endeavors to set forth two lines of material of service to the exhibitor—first, a showman's evaluations of the outstanding pictures—second, reviews of information

NO GREATER LOVE

Columbia 60 minutes

A GOOD audience picture where this type of entertainment is liked; but possibly a bit questionable where Jewish characterizations and dialogue are not particularly appreciated. Alexander Carr and the kiddies, Dickie Moore and Betty Graham, give splendid portrayals of their respective roles and easily win the hearts of their audience.

The title can be built up to good proportions for the box office where tied closely to the theme of the story. Many good angles present themselves in the selling of a picture of this kind and it's a good thing that such is the case because it is very weak on marquee and draw names. But you can overcome this weakness, especially in the spots outside of the big key cities, by selling the title and catchlines and not depending too much on names.

Its long suit is its audience value. In most theatres, the neighborhood houses in particular, they will eat it up and love it. Cry? Yep. It seems to be the present rage in films for a parent and child crying contest in which the audience plays a prominent part. But from experience we know that the average picture fan loves to shed tears. They'll be satisfied with this one.

OK for kids or Sundays. Just a case of booking where you please and then getting behind it with one of those heart-throb campaigns designed to get them talking before they even see the picture.

SINNERS IN THE SUN

THIS picture was evidently designed to give the feminine players a swell chance to wear gorgeous gowns, and they certainly have succeeded because every woman in your town should be enthralled by the magnificent array of smart styles as they parade before them on the screen during the unreeling of this picture.

The title has a certain amount of b.o. appeal which can be materially strengthened by the cast, the gowns and some selling angle to make your advertising campaign attractive. Carole Lombard and Chester Morris are probably good marquee names in most theatres and capable of carrying the "name" pull above or below the title. Ads should be made up to appeal to the women folk while Carole in a bathing suit ought to take care of the men folk. We just knew they would have her in a bathing suit somewhere in the picture, and we did not guess wrong. She has plenty of it and no doubt your male patrons will come out to see her.

N.G. for kids or Sundays. Play it midweek and make the gowns and the bathing figure of the star your best selling mediums. (Straight laced communities excepted.)

WHEN A FELLOW NEEDS A FRIEND

MGM 76 minutes

GET another dozen hankies ready. Here is another of the "tear-brigade," all primed to catch the waterfalls from many crying patrons of movieland. This makes no less than five pictures within ten days on Broadway wherein some unfortunate youngster must win the sympathy of the audience.

BUT, there is only one Jackie Cooper and believe me it's a pleasure to cry with him any day. This time he's the poor little cripple who always gets the tough breaks, but this picture has one redeeming feature; the famous doctor does not cure him. Whatarelief. We'll bet your audience is gonna be fooled just as we were. They will fully expect him to be walking, skipping and jumping before the "finis" flashes on the screen.

A NEW SERVICE IN NEXT ISSUE

Service to the exhibitor in the form of evaluation of motion pictures from the standpoint of showmanship possibilities, which in the final analysis is the most effective contribution that can be made to the exhibitor in a review of product, will be the aim of all comment on pictures in this department, starting with next week's issue. The cast will be listed in all cases for immediate accessibility but details of the story of the picture, except insofar as they concern exploitation, will be left to the pressbooks.

The title ought to be plenty strong for most localities. If not, then the name of Jackie, plus "Chic" Sale, plus the highlights of the story, ought not only to make up for it but pull it way above par to boot. You can shout that title, the two stars and some swell catchline copy from every one of your ads, your screen and your marquee.

Audience value is aces high, except in the large first-run keys. There they may tilt the end of the nose skywards for a wee fraction of an inch, but they'll love the picture just the same. Jackie, as usual, gives an excellent account of himself and is ably assisted by Sale. Between them they make a most likable combination that will be hard to beat at any box office window.

CHARLES E. LEWIS

(Paramount)

Drama

Carole Lombard and Chester Morris share the lead in this film, based on a story by Mildred Cram, and, it must be said, rather elderly in theme, and hardly greatly distinctive in treatment.

Miss Lombard is the hard working dress model in an exclusive shop, in love, mutually, with Mechanic Morris. She refuses to marry him until he accumulates enough money to open his own garage, and he, angry, breaks with her, becomes chauffeur to Adrienne Ames, wealthy, in love with him after an accidental meeting.

She, on her account, becomes mistress of also wealthy Walter Byron, about to divorce a wife he cares little about. Morris follows his wife, wearing dress clothes, hearing his present position variously referred to in uncomplimentary manner; Miss Lombard follows Byron over the world, gambling, drinking, watching Rita La Roy, in a similar position to herself, only with Cary Grant, take poison, kill herself.

They both, apparently, take a severe lesson, a severe mental drubbing. Accidentally meeting, after Miss Lombard breaks with Byron, Morris preserves his angry front, breaks a spoon on the restaurant table, in a closeup shot of suppressed feeling, and leaves after saying nasty things. Miss Lombard, hurt, goes to work in a dress factory as a cutter, where Byron, seeking a reconciliation, finds her one day, rebuffed. Into the next room walks Morris, who had explained the situation to sportswoman Miss Ames, left her, and is selling automobiles. Miss Lombard, running out, tries to escape, he notices her, goes in pursuit, and they conclude the film in the elevator of the building.

Produced and distributed by Paramount. Directed by Alexander Hall. Based on the story by Mildred Cram. Screen play by Vincent Lawrence, Waldemar Young and Samuel Hoffenstein. Photographed by Ray June. Release date, May 13, 1932. Running time, 70 minutes.

(MGM)

Juvenile Drama

The unmistakable and definite appeal of a performance by young Jackie Cooper, again made itself felt at the Capitol in New York this week, where the youngster, coupled chiefly with Charles "Chic" Sale, in his familiar old man role, brought forth tears, laughter, from a crowded house in an acknowledged tremendously effective portrayal.

The story is taken from William Johnston's "Limpy," directed with unquestioned feeling and intelligence by Harry Pollard. Jackie is Limpy, barred from the play of the other boys by an iron brace, and from a chance to develop normally by an over-indulgent father and mother, played by Ralph Graves and Dorothy Peterson. Jackie's pal is his grand-uncle, Sale, old, boastful, appealing, who makes every possible effort to strengthen the backbone of the lad.

Recorded are the tribulations of the boys, whipped by his parents, so to speak, glorying in the introduction the old man gives him to the fun of the small boy. Adopted by Graves is Andy Shuford, in the unsympathetic role of the bully, who browbeats his weaker cousin at the slightest opportunity. Time and again, despite the lessons in boxing, the lectures in backbone, supplied by Sale, Jackie turns quitter at the crucial moment. A European surgeon examines Jackie, finds that the boy can never remove the brace, to his poignant disappointment.

Slowly he limps to the shack of Sale, discharged as driver of the local horse car, thrown out of his home with Graves because of his "meddling." Sale is about to be taken to the poor farm, since he cannot support himself. The boys come with the wagon, stone the shack. Jackie goes out, fights Shuford, the battle moving inside the house. Sale stands off Jackie's parents, while the boys fight it out within. Jackie wins his right to be a boy with other boys, Sale is replaced in the good graces of the family.

Comedy is inserted with a sure touch, immediately following those scenes which are heavily dramatic. The burden of it is carried by Sale, with an effect readily attested by the Capitol audience.

Produced and distributed by MGM. Directed by Harry Pollard. From the story "Limpy" by William Johnston. Dialogue and continuity by Sylvia Thalberg and Frank Butler. Photographed by Harold Rosson. Film editor, William Levanway. Release date, April 30, 1932. Running time, 76 minutes.

(Columbia)

Propaganda Drama

By a screened foreword avowedly propaganda, this film takes up the cudgels in defense of the crippled orphan child, who, confined to the public institution, loses whatever chance it might have for recovery of health, or at least the happiness which is provided by a home and devoted surroundings.

Featured in the cast, and most appreciatively received at the Roxy theatre in New York, were Alexander Carr as the Jewish grocery shop owner on the East Side; Betty Jane Graham, appealing and pretty, as the crippled orphan; little Dickie Moore, who in speech, appearance, actions invariably finds hearty response from an audience. The Roxy patrons indicated the impression the film made with laughter, tears, close attention throughout.

The story is one of simplicity, unsophisticated devotion. Carr takes in, devotedly cares for Betty Jane, when her mother dies in the flat above his store. Her playmate is Dickie, whose grandmother, Beryl Mercer, keeps house each day for Carr, tends the child. Martha Mattox, rock-ribbed investigator for an institution, discovers the case, arranges that the child shall be placed in a home for orphans. Carr learns of the appearance in New York of a famed European surgeon, played by Richard Bennett, sells his store for $3,000, has an operation performed on the child. It is only moderately successful. The child is still unable to walk.

Reduced to peddling, Carr returns one night to find that Miss Mattox has taken the child to the institution. The court refuses to permit him to adopt her legally. He sees the child each week at the home, until the superintendent tells him his visits are undermining her health. In a dramatic sequence, he pretends to be displeased with her, leaves, later collapses in the street. Dying, he calls for Betty Jane, and the priest, Alec Francis, who with Mischa Auer, as the rabbi, are in attendance, goes to the home, takes the child despite protest, brings her to Carr. His appearance awakens strength in the child, and she walks to him. A final scene shows Carr, Betty Jane, Dickie together in the park.

Produced and distributed by Columbia. Directed by Lewis Seiler. Story and screen play by Isadore Bernstein. Continuity by Lou Breslew. Photographed by William Thompson. Supervised by Benjamin Stoloff. Release date, May 13, 1932. Running time, 60 minutes.

Water Gypsies

(Associated Radio)

Low Life Story

(Seen in London)

Made just before the Associated Radio unit opened its own new studios, this contains photographic excellence but the story was considered rather weak. It is just a simple love story of a barge girl wooed by two men; alternating between them; recognizing after a long footage that one is wheat, the other chaff, and then doing the right thing.

Sari Maritza, reported set for the big stellar try in Hollywood, was only moderately well received as a barge girl. Characterizations, like the story itself, are weak, comment indicated. The moral is that life on the barge, with love, is better than life in a first class hotel with love and no lock on the bedroom door.

The best work among the performers is put in by Ian Hunter as a barge hero. Ann Todd as the chief girl is fair, and Peter Hannen, as the other lover, shows promise which his untimely death cuts short. He might have made a fine juvenile lead.

The Rich Are Always With Us

(First National)

Drama

Ruth Chatterton in her first starring vehicle under the Warner name offers the lead in a drama of marital complication, with these complications supplied for the most part by John Miljan as her not too devoted husband; by George Brent as the novelist with whom she is really in love; Adrienne Dore as the object of Miljan's attentions; Bette Davis as Miss Chatterton's friend, and also in love with Brent.

Miss Chatterton is at all times self-possessed in her work, which calls for the protrayal of a woman, wealthy, on the horns of a dilemma, on the one side, Brent; on the other Miljan, who she thinks is on the square, and who very nearly prevents her from ultimately completing her romance with Brent.

The settings are the sumptuous affairs to be expected from a story centering exclusively about the manner and mode of the wealthy. The scene on one occasion moves to Paris, but quickly returns to its locale, New York, smart restaurants, smarter homes.

Miss Chatterton, married to Miljan, refuses to acknowledge the attentions of Brent, believing her husband honest, until she comes upon him in fond embrace with Miss Dore, at a party. She offers him a divorce, which he accepts, marries Miss Dore. She goes to Paris, leaving Brent, who is being assiduously pursued by Miss Davis, without pretense. Miss Chatterton, returning, keeps Brent at arm's length, until his patience gives out and he prepares to leave for China on a writing assignment. She promises finally to marry him, after spending many hours with him at the house party where they meet. Next morning, Miss Dore, jealous, is about to reveal the "scandal" when she is prevented by Miss Davis, taken home by Miljan. On the way the car is wrecked, Miss Dore is killed, Miljan badly hurt. Miss Chatterton comes to him, promises to stay until he recovers and is married to Brent by a judge friend, also a patient in the hospital.

Produced and distributed by First National. Directed by Alfred E. Green. Story by E. Pettit. Adaptation by Austin Parker. Photographed by Ernest Haller. Edited by George Marks. Release date, May 21, 1932. Running time, 71 minutes.

A Night Like This

(British and Dominions)

Farce-Comedy

(Seen in London)

This is just another Travers farce, successful on the London stage, and which in film version was well received, particularly Ralph Lynn and Tom Walls, with a reputation for this class of entertainment. It is trifling in story weight, but is packed with gags common to the Lynn humour.

Comedy is worked out in a night club very largely, where Tom Walls, as an ambitious policeman, traps a set of crooks and helps Lynn in the recovery of a valuable stolen necklace. The settings are extremely effective, and polish is pronounced in every foot. Walls, besides acting in the film, took the direction, and played for workmanlike finish, rather than for deliberate novelty.

The support players include Winifred Shotter with a less effective part than usual; Mary Brough, who always plays every part just the same; Robertson Hare, one of the funny men in pictures, and Claude Hulbert, brother of the famous comedian, Jack Hulbert, who breaks into films with distinct comedy chances.

Dialogue is very plentiful, but keeps up a good level of humor, and there is too much amusing business to make any of the footage overweight.

Nine Till Six

(Associated Radio Pictures)

Drama

(Seen in London)

This is the first picture actually to be completed in the new Associated Radio studio at Ealing Green, London, one of the most up to date in the country and modeled on the lines of the RKO studios in U. S. A. If this quality can be maintained the RKO circuit will wire Ealing for more and quick!

It was termed a fine, sympathetic story, which builds up a great pathos around "madam," the central character, who runs a modiste shop. "Madam" is played by Louise Hampton, who did the part in the stage play on this side, and who here makes her film debut. Her work was conceded to place her at once in the front rank of British stars.

Much of the story is taken up with the doings of a number of mannequins, their ambitions and their disappointments. One borrows a dress in which to attend a fine ball, but she is found out, and is then suspected of thefts which have been going on over a period. Madam is inquiring into the thefts, when one real culprit confesses, and in a wild outburst reminds Madam that all the girls have to work, work—work—among the pretty clothes "from nine to six" and then go to drab homes, while she can go away to the gay life donned in the creations for which her house is famous.

At that moment the phone rings, and Madam learns that her only son, a war scarred hero, has died. Nothing matters: the thefts are forgotten: all other business worries, too. The tawdry, tinselled beauties hanging around the salon mean nothing to a bereaved mother. Madam is revealed to her assistants as a woman. The salon is closed and the mother is left to her thoughts. Treatment does great credit to Basil Dean, and rises to greater emotion levels than are usually attempted in British pictures.

Technical quality was thought high, and the film looks like one that will add color to the reputation of British films in America.

Produced by Associated Radio Pictures. Distributed by Radio Pictures (RKO). Directed by Basil Dean. Photographed by Robert T. Martin and Robert le Grasse. Running time, 76 minutes.

Edgar Kennedy in another of the "Average Man" series in which he is featured currently by RKO Pathe. Together, and with the aid of brother-in-law William Eugene, they wear Kennedy to a frazzle in his efforts to construct the boat in the boathouse. A few laughs, a generally fair comedy.—Running time, 20 minutes.

Romance
(Educational)

A cartoon of the usual animated variety and containing but little that is extraordinary in drawing, idea or execution. However, there is the amusement of the animated animal wooing and winning his sweetheart despite the machinations of the villain.—Running time, 6 minutes.

The Bird Store
(Columbia)
Novel

All the birds in the pet shop are having a great time, in this animated number of the Silly Symphony series, when one of the younger of the species escapes from his cage. The cat goes in hot pursuit, and all the birds in the place rally to a concentrated attack on the cat. It is novel, amusing.—Running time, 7 minutes.

Spring Antics
(Radio)
Enjoyable

The duck wakes the ground hog in animated fashion and the various species of birds and animals, as pictured by the cartoonist, awake to enjoy the spring. It's Amusing

Mickey is entered in the big "Olympic" animated race, and is faced with innumerable obstacles, placed by his unscrupulous animated rival. Of course, Mickey overcomes them and wins, and in highly amusing animated fashion.—Running time, 7 minutes.

Rule 'Em and Weep
(RKO)
Good

Sumptuous setting, by contrast, add additional amusement to this Hollywood Masquer's Club effort, produced by Van Beuren for RKO release. It concerns, in nonsensical fashion, the robbing of a safe by nobility incognito. The prime minister leads the nobility back to rescue the princess from the "penthouse dungeon." Most amusing is the deliberate use of wrong sound effects at every opportunity. The short was directed by Harry Sweet from a story by Walter Weems and Edward Earle. Numerous laughs.—Running time, 19 minutes.

Dancing Daddies
(Universal)
There Are Laughs

The old story of the husband, AWOL, pursued by the wife, but as usual, good for several hearty laughs. Hubby fights with his wife as a means of getting out for a showgirl date. The wife bursts in on the party and the chase is on. Hubby runs right out the window and climbs a rope, but the gentle wife cuts the rope, landing her better half in the hospital. He is not in heaven, as he thinks, but in bed with the wife waiting to complete the battle.—Running time, 17 minutes.

The Spot on the Rug
Not Many Laughs

Somewhere on the sea, aboard a ship, a writer is attempting to find a conclusion for a chapter of a serial. The ideas which come to him are enacted aboard, with Edgar Kennedy and Marjorie Kane doing most of the acting, aided and abetted by Billy Bevan. There is much excitement and several pursuits revolving about a jeweled watch, which Kennedy, crook, forces Bevan to swallow when detectives arrive from an airplane. There are only a few spots which have laugh-provoking quality.—Running time, 19 minutes.

Choo-Choo
(MGM)
Comic

One of the Hal Roach numbers and one with a good bit of comedy therein. A group of the Our Gang youngsters do things to the regularity and routine of a Pullman coach, when they change uniforms with several orphans, and then the fun begins. Animals in the baggage car are let loose, the fireworks in a traveling salesman's suitcase are used to best advantage, and generally it is quite amusing.—Running time, 21 minutes.

Steel
(Ufa)
Industrial Atmosphere

Heavily atmospheric, with a symphony orchestra providing background music of appropriate weight and depth, while the camera roves about coal mines, ore yards and a steel mill of large proportions located somewhere in Europe's famed Ruhr Basin. Not a clear-cut picture of the evolution of steel as a finished product, but none-the-less definitely interesting and to a slight degree enlightening. Well conveyed is the impression of power in machinery, of the heat and toil of steel's production. Effective.—Running time, 10 minutes.

High Hats and Low Brows
(RKO Pathe)
Only Fair

Jimmy Gleason as the fight promoter of Rufftown and his "champeen," Harry Gribbon as "Ham Hand," provide only fair comedy and amusement in this latest of the Rufftown series. The promise of the opening numbers of the group has hardly been maintained. In this Gleason and Gribbon, with the latter's girl, go to a mansion at the master's suggestion to break his wife of her snobbishness. A servant knocks out the "champeen" neatly and with dispatch, but laughs are comparatively few.—Running time, 19 minutes.

During the earlier calendar week, ended May 7, 189 theatres in 31 cities showed a total gross of $2,376,736. In the course of the more recent seven-day period, there were established two new individual high house records, at the Metropolitan in Houston, with "Scarface," and at the Uptown in Boston, with "The Miracle Man," while nine new low individual figures were noted. This compares with two new "highs" and four new "lows" in the preceding week.

YOUR PUBLIC

by
RITA C. McGOLDRICK

AT the present moment we are facing the menace of the double feature. From the letters that pour into this department we are prepared to believe that it is no longer a menace but something of a curse! Thoughtful people, the organized club groups, parent-teacher and better film councils are all loud in their protests. They claim that too frequently a good picture which the family might enjoy is shown on the same bill with an objectionable one—and they list among the objectionable variety the lurid sex themes, the gangsters, the subtle boudoir farce as well as the vulgar comedies. Vaudeville is also included in the growing indictment, with its too frequent suggestive acts and double-edged jests.

These bad combinations of program material nullify the work of the better films groups. The members themselves are embarrassed in giving publicity to an endorsed picture which has to share program time with a picture of which they disapprove.

Theatre men, in an attempt to attract business by the double feature method, are providing their patrons with indigestible entertainment. They are offering too much for the money. And, strangely enough, here is one kind of bargain that the public is objecting to. The increasing clamor against this practice is something to think about!

The Sad Juvenile

While we are on the subject of wails and complaints, here is one for the producers to consider. The past year has given us several outstanding dramatic features for children. But there has not been a gay one in the lot! "Penrod and Sam," "Skippy," "Sooky" and the rest sent the children out of the theatres with their eyes cried out—a forlorn audience immeasurably saddened because of the tragic death of a most dear dog, or, as in "Sooky," the heart wrenching death of a small boy's lonely mother. One juvenile commentator remarked about these pictures that "Sooky" was really not as sad as "Skippy," because in "Skippy" it wasn't a mother; it was the dog that died.

Why do we have to entertain children with tragedy? Why do we have to be constantly reminded of the histrionic genius of the small actors in these pictures who have learned the trick of turning one's heart inside out with their pathos?

Why not, in times of national depression, be gay in our pictures?

Samuel Goldwyn Answers

The following extract from a letter written by Samuel Goldwyn to a personal friend, has something of serious significance. He has put his finger with fine understanding on the sore spot in this whole subject:

"With you, I am deeply interested in motion pictures for children. For the problem is as personal with me as it is with you. I, too, have a child of my own. And I know that the child audience today will become the adult audience of tomorrow.

"I believe stories like 'Treasure Island,' 'Alice in Wonderland' or 'Huckleberry Finn,' even when they are transcribed to the screen, appeal less to the modern child than pictures that have as their foundation the lore of animal life, the conquest of nature or the creation of mechanical or engineering works. 'Hell's Angels,' 'The Dawn Patrol,' 'Tarzan,' 'With Byrd at the South Pole,' or 'Chang' were vital and absorbing to every child.

"I mean that the principle now widely accepted in primary schools to the effect that the child should be given simple physical things to occupy his hands and mind could be profitably and expertly extended to explain a new psychology of the screen for children. To me, this 'doing something with the hands, something physical,' is an element in a narrative picture that gives it a special appeal to a child. Obviously, it couldn't or shouldn't be made the treatise subject of a full length film.

"Personally, I'm not as much interested in having my son feel Skippy's emotional tremors as I am in seeing him absorbed in something colorful in animal life, something beautiful in nature, or something skillful in the use of his hands.

"I think that the child's diet of fantastic and imaginative literature can easily be filled out of what is already the overstocked storehouse of the world. But the screen, graphic and illuminative, can make interesting and exciting and dramatic what would, in the written word, be dull and uninteresting and possibly unintelligible to the child."

A. H. Blank, Industry Pioneer, Visiting New York From Iowa

A. H. Blank, pioneer in the industry and one of the 26 original First National franchise holders, is visiting New York this week. Blank is at present operating theatres in the Iowa territory, under the firm name of Central States Theatres Corporation.

Raymond Blank, his son, has just returned from nine months abroad, on assignment for the syndicated newspaper service of the Des Moines Register and Tribune, and will enter his father's company at the Des Moines headquarters of the circuit.

Universal To Do 18 for Veterans

The non-theatrical division of Universal will make 18 features for the 72 hospitals and soldier homes of the Veteran's Administration of Washington, D. C., by a contract signed this week. In addition, Universal will make 42 one-reel subjects, including newsreels, between July 1, 1932 and June 30, 1933, for the organization.

Walter Winchell, columnist, will appear in a Universal feature, with production set for June 6. The title will be "O.K. America." The company has purchased the play "Merry Go Round," by Albert Meltz and George Sklar, for production, probably on next season's schedule.

Talmadge Will Make 8 Films To Be Marketed by Mercury

Richard Talmadge will make a series of eight action features to be sold through Mercury Pictures Corporation for the state rights market. Carl J. Coe, former general sales manager of Tiffany, is vice-president and general manager of Mercury. The first of the Talmadge pictures is expected to be ready for release about September 1.

Talmadge heretofore has starred in, produced, and distributed his own product. It is understood sufficient financial backing has been obtained, however, to enable Talmadge to devote all his time to production. Amer-Anglo Corporation has contracted for the foreign rights on the pictures. Offices of Mercury are located at 226 West 42d Street, New York.

THE S. M. P. E. MEETING!

SOMEBODY said it would take courage to go to a meeting of the Society of Motion Picture Engineers at Washington and discuss something that was not strictly technical. Well, I went and read a paper before that august body and found it took no courage whatsoever. Maybe, because I felt that what I was suggesting was too practical to be passed over lightly. But at any rate they heard me through and then argued about it among themselves. Something may come of it yet. Who can tell?

A steady downpour which started long before I arrived, continued until the morning I left; so as far as I'm concerned Washington was well washed up.

Never even dared to risk the elements to get downtown and visit with some of the theatre crowd, but spoke to many of them on the phone and made a solemn promise that we would be back again soon. We mean to keep that promise because we must be able to tell our great-grandchildren what the Capitol of these here United States looks like.

The banquet which wound up the S. M. P. E. meeting was the bright spot of the entire affair. . . . "Pop" Richardson and his daughter were the life of their table. . . . Harry Holland tried to dance with every female in the place and seemed to be getting away with it . . . if he can sell equipment like he can dance . . . hooray . . . Concord of Blue Seal products had an interesting display of some new booth improvements, and was he making everyone look them over. . . . Genial George Edwards had some constructive comment to offer on most of the theatre papers read . . . and one look at Chauncy Greene would make you doubt that he was ONLY a projectionist . . . but he certainly knows his projection . . . and then some. . . . Jimmy Finn said goodbye twenty-three times and finally did get going . . . no one was believing him towards the end of his "goodbying". . . . Oscar Neu of New York knew everybody around the place . . . (ha, ha—is this a bum gag?) . . . What that meeting would have done without the aid of N. G. Golden is a mystery . . . he was everywhere, looking after every little detail of that banquet, and the gang seemed to appreciate it, too.

Pat McGuire decided to become a dancing master . . . and how he danced. . . . Will Whitmore of Western Electric handled the publicity and certainly turned in a swell job. . . . Dr. Goldsmith, prexy of the Society, made it a point to personally comment on each paper read while he was presiding and as a result encouraged discussion among the other members. . . .

The after-dinner speeches were great . . . except . . . It was this way: The master of ceremonies, Congressman William P. Connery, Jr., of Mass., told some stories that had the crowd rolling between the tables . . . ditto for the other speaker . . . but then they introduced one of those guys who gets started and then never knows when to stop . . . before he was finally finished he had everybody nuts . . . but one must take the good with the bad . . . and we did. . . .

Some of the others present and very well accounted for included: President Robbins of the Independent Supply Dealers. . . . Charles Brownell. . . . J. C. Krosen. . . . Bill Kunzman. . . . Nat Glaser. . . . John M. Gibbs. . . . Stanley Sumner. . . . and many others.

It was great to hear from Frank Boucher and his most gracious wife who phoned before I had a chance to take my overcoat off, to find out if Mrs. "Chick" was along . . . bet they would have shown her a grand time . . . but, unfortunately, she did not go down with me, so we'll have to take advantage of the Boucher family's kind offer some time in the future. . . .

Frank La Falce was another who called right away . . . tough break for the Warner boys having to sit through endless screenings and passing up the big feed bag . . . but thems the breaks . . . if it's any consolation, boys, I ate enough for all of you. . . .

The picture shows after each night session were well patronized by all the ladies in the party and a few hundred who crashed by looking important . . . and in between papers . . . you should have heard some of the conversation . . . we ain't ever hoid such woids before in all our life . . . can't even pronounce them more less know what they meant. . . . Oh, well . . . some day that crowd will learn to talk our language . . . then we'll know what it's all about.

Seriously though, it was a revelation to me to attend the meeting and to find out how these technical men, mostly all engineers of great reputation, tackled the many problems of this business and always were working hard to bring about improvements all along the line. They deserve the support of the entire industry and we hope to watch their future activities with much interest. "CHICK"

Some managers are born "funny" while others get that way from reading home office correspondence. This one has not yet become accustomed to the booker's notes on the booking sheet, but he's out to battle for "good old Palace Theatre" and you can't budge him an inch. Well anyway, he's still able to fight for what he thinks is right.

WILLS FINDS KODAK STUNT IS VERY GOOD AID TO BOX OFFICE

One of our recently-elected members, H. W. Wills, advertising and house manager of the Palace Theatre, Petersburg, Va., has been using a stunt for the past several weeks and wants to pass it along to his fellow Clubmen.

Every day he has a cameraman on the streets from two to three P. M. who takes pictures of shoppers, etc., at random. The pictures are displayed in the theatre lobby. Anyone who can recognize themselves in the photos is given a guest ticket. The cost is very small and Wills has a tie-up with a local kodak man, who takes care of most of the expense.

As Wills states, the above gag will not sell tickets, but it does result in a steady stream of potential customers in the lobby every day, with interest mounting as time goes on. Thanks to him for sending along the suggestion and we're sure that others will take advantage of it.

NEXT WEEK!

The Round Table Club has been very fortunate in securing the assistance of Ken Long, formerly of the Paramount-Publix home office advertising department, to present a series of illustrated articles dealing with the use of exchange mats in the make-up of newspaper advertising.

Do not miss this important feature which should prove tremendously helpful to every real showman. It begins in the Club section next week and will continue until every theatre manager has had a chance to acquire a thorough knowledge into the best ways of framing newspaper advertising.

SAMS PROMOTED BIG NEWSPAPER SECTION FOR A FASHION SHOW

An eight-page Fashion Show section in a local newspaper proves to us that A. F. Sams, Jr., treasurer and general manager of the Statesville Playhouse Theatre, Statesville, N. C., made a good job of it when he promoted his Spring event. From both an advertising and editorial viewpoint the section was a neat piece of work. Various merchants, clothing and otherwise, were represented.

To hold the show Sams tied-up with both newspaper and Merchants' Association, enough of the special sections being printed to cover every house for miles around. Extra attractions on the night of the show consisted of a singing and dancing act; six prettier-than-usual girls—two blondes, two brunettes and two redheads—and specialty dances and song hits were put over in between displays. Sams tells us that those six good looking girls made $8.95 dresses look like $29.50 garments. Local talent was used wherever possible.

From start to finish the whole show clicked along at a fast clip, which accounted in no small way for the huge success of the occasion. Displays and entertainment were well mixed and killed the usual taint of merchant advertising so evident in many shows of this kind.

All of which serves to remind us to inquire if all our Club members have taken the necessary steps to promote their Spring Show. It's not too late yet by a long shot, but action should be taken before the season advances too far, for very obvious reasons.

Soup To Nuts

M. A. Zimmerman, manager of the Portland Theatre, Casselton, North Dakota, tells us that the folk out in his town got a big kick out of "Menu" heralds he issued to cover a month's attractions. The different pictures were listed as "appetizers, soups, entrees, salads, deserts, demi-tasse," etc., and theatre heartily "recommended the treatment for sour, sick stomachs."

OUR OLD FRIEND HANK HAROLD CRASHED LOCAL PAPER WITH A SKETCH

We picked up a copy of the "New York Evening Journal" a short time ago and happened to note a two-column photo of James Cagney, headed, "Art Lover? M'Gosh!" It illustrated an interview with the star by one of the staff and showed Cagney holding a sketch of himself. There was something familiar about that sketch and upon closer examination we found the artist to be none other than our old friend and Round Tabler, Hank Harold, of the Warner theatre staff in Cleveland. Harold gave Cagney the sketch when the latter recently made a stop off in that city.

Such is fame, and it all goes to prove that an up-and-doing artist may wake up most any morning and find that his work made appearance in one of the big city dailies. However, Harold is capable of turning out excellent work and we don't blame Cagney for hanging on to the sketch. It was a fine likeness.

DE HAVEN ON THE JOB OF BUILDING TRADE FOR BURKE

A variety of recently pulled gags are offered as evidence that Milo De Haven is still on the job with his business builders for the Burke and other J. G. Bolte Theatres in the Bronx section of New York City.

One of his stunts was a radio audition broadcast from the stage of the Burke Theatre and photo on this page shows a front display of three instruments he promoted from a local merchant for giveaways. Note the "mike" attached to one of the radios. This throws the voice right through the loud speaker and most any local radio man can make the hook up. Then your radio-broadcast aspirants can hear what their voices might sound like over the air.

GLORIA SWANSON TO-NIGHT OR NEVER

We also note that he has been using Sunday matinee and evening vaudeville acts at the Burke, such as the appearance of some well known night club entertainer, to stimulate attendance. A portion of a house program was also devoted to an announcement that the theatre wanted "50 local ladies and gentlemen to take part in the Burke Follies." Singers, dancers and instrumentalists between the age of 17 and 21 were asked to report to the theatre manager.

Okay, Milo, and we know you'll keep plugging along. Keep in touch with headquarters and let's know what else is going on in Bolte houses.

ROUND TABLE BIOGRAPHIES

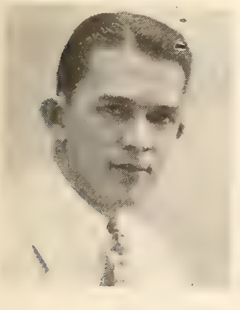
After spending eight years in North Carolina, R. N. Christopher returned to Maryland, the state he was born in, and entered showbusiness by way of the Federal Theatre, Federalsburg, a new house which was opened last Fall.



R. N. Christopher

The above managerial post is the only one that Christopher has held thus far, but showbusiness appeals to him and he intends to adopt it as his career, at least at this writing he states that he hasn't any intention of leaving this game for another. He thinks it's "the most fascinating game on earth" and one that makes work a pleasure, so what more can any man ask.

Christopher was born in Hurlock, Maryland, November 30, 1905, and received his education in the Hurclock High School and Baltimore City College. He's a married man and a member of the Odd Fellows.

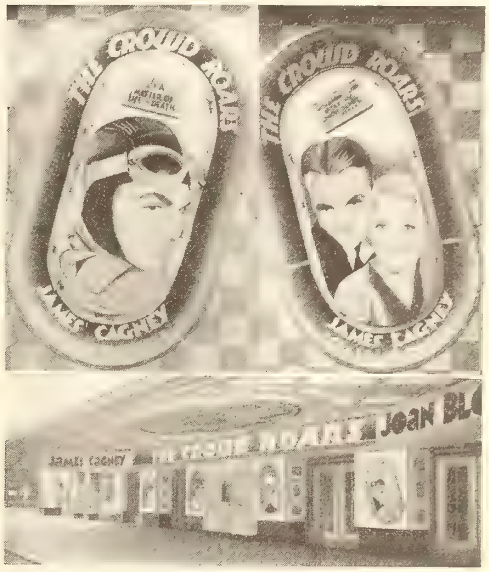
WARNER STAFF MADE STRIKING FRONT FOR THE WINTER GARDEN

Among the outstanding fronts recently constructed by the Warner theatre staff in New York City was one made up for the James Cagney picture, "The Crowd Roars," which consisted of the regular, huge Winter Garden sign, a moving display of miniature autos and a striking display of panels, both flush and sunken.

Pictured here is a view of the several panels used between the entrance doors and close-ups of two of them. Both feature Cagney and Joan Blondell, while the others played up the race angles. Sketches of speeding autos decorated the frames of the latter.



The moving display consisted of electrically operated miniature cars running on six tracks erected over the box office and along the entire length of the Winter Garden. The picture has been doing excellent business at the rate of nine shows per day.

LYKES MADE TIE-UP WITH BALLROOM FOR "DANCE TEAM" STUNT

A tie-up with one of the leading dance ballrooms in his town recently worked out well on "Dance Team" for J. E. Lykes, manager of Loew's Park Theatre, Cleveland, Ohio.

Each night at the dance hall a mysterious judge would select a couple on the floor to compete with seven other couples in an elimination for the "Dance Team Contest," held on a Friday or one day before opening of picture. Announcements were made every night for one week at the ballroom over a radio program, stating that anyone was eligible to participate in the stunt. The ballroom also furnished a couple each night to do the "Sally-Jim" dance and distributed 2,000 heralds that Lykes had run off on his mimeograph. One-sheets were also displayed.

The stunt drew lots of attention and all it set the theatre back was a first award of $10 in gold. Passes were given to the other contestants who took part in the finals. There are a number of dance hall pictures on the market at this writing and it would seem that a stunt of this kind would prove a "natural" for any of them. Thanks to you, Lykes, for passing along the reminder, and let's hear some more.

WILL MACK'S FASHION SHOW!

Careful Planning and Fine Cooperation Helped Make This Profitable For All Concerned!

A SHORT time ago a group of smart business men out in Jonesboro, Ark., got together and concluded that what the town needed in the way of a Spring tonic was a Fashion Show. Leaders in the movement were Will Mack, manager of the Strand Theatre, and his able advertising manager, Elliott Johnson. Others represented the editorial and advertising departments of a leading evening newspaper. The 17th of March was set for the date and subsequent events proved that not even the birthday of famous St. Patrick playing day and date was enough to stem the tide of publicity rolled up for the occasion.

Lined Up the Merchants!

The first move was to line up the merchants who, according to some tear sheets we have at hand, came through one hundred per cent. Window carnivals were planned; displays of the newest in clothing by live models on the theatre stage were arranged; a couple was sought out to take part in a stage wedding; a cash prize pooled for creation of the best display, and the High School Band tied-in for a concert on night of opening.

Cooperation on the part of the "Jonesboro Sun" played an outstanding part in the campaign leading up to the Show, as front page tear sheets we have before us testify. For 10 days in advance the paper came through with a well conducted story campaign which culminated in a special style show edition one day before opening. Opening day drew a banner head on the lead story for the day and the issue following the night of the show again featured a front page story under a six column streamer.

A Business Attracter!

The special fashion edition was as nicely assembled as any ever brought to our attention and again reflects the wholehearted cooperation of the newspaper's able and energetic advertising manager and his assistants. It is out of the question to do justice to the section with the few samples of ads which we are reproducing here but these will at least serve to convey some idea of how every prominent merchant in town subscribed to the event. What have furniture stores, drug stores, auto dealers, a lumber company, an insurance agency, the city water and light plant, an optician, banks, laundries, gas stations and numerous other concerns, to do with fashions in spring clothing, one may well ask, for all those and many others were represented among the 12 pages.

Not directly interested, of course, but darned concerned about the success of a big attraction that many merchants had put their shoulders to in an effort to stimulate trade. Not only would the advertisers reap a percentage of benefit from an increase in revenue to the merchants and employees but it was a great opportunity to take space in a section that was bound to receive wide circulation.

It wasn't difficult to fit copy to the ads not directly concerned with spring fashions. Drug stores always have "spring tonics"; auto dealers are always stepping out with Spring Models; people interested in building homes generally seek out lumber concerns in the Spring; Spring brings a heavy increase in motoring, hence a thought for insurance, and the many modern appliances in stock at light and power companies will make Spring cleaning easier.

Another interesting angle to the Fashion Show was that it was not merely confined to women's wear but also featured the latest styles in men's clothing. This move brought in many additional tailors, shoe, haberdasher and clothing store ads which would have been otherwise out of step with the parade.

One paragraph in Mack's letter tells the whole story of the opening night of the Show. It stated: "Thirty minutes after the doors were thrown open we had to close them again and turn away more people than we could get into the house, which seats 1,100."

All of which makes us wonder over here why Will and Elliott didn't repeat the show on the following night. However, that was their problem and some existing circumstances may have prohibited a second showing. It was, at any rate, a tremendous success and both these showmen hope that other Club members will have the good fortune to cash in on a similar event.

WE WOULD LIKE TO HEAR MORE ABOUT A SABLOSKY NEWSPAPER

Once again it is our pleasure to comment on the flourishing condition of that community newspaper, "The North Philadelphia and Erlen News," published and edited by David R. Sablosky, head of the Erlen Theatre.

Headlines across the masthead announces that the paper has the largest circulation of any weekly in North Philadelphia, a matter of 33,000 copies and 150,000 readers. The paper appears unique in its field and there can be no doubt but that it is made to serve as a powerful factor for the Erlen Theatre.

If Manager Sablosky will take some time off one of these days and tell us all about how he came to establish his paper, his present plan of operation, etc., we have an idea that it would make mighty interesting material for this department. We will look forward to hearing from him.

Business Men To Rescue

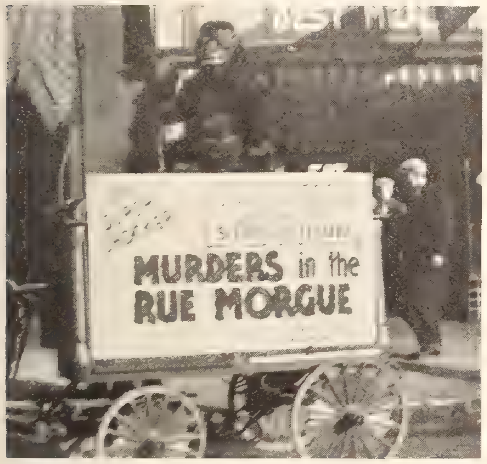
Business men of Alpena, S. D., are financing operation of a motion picture show by having each member of their association pay into a fund each week to make up the deficit caused by operating the house on Saturdays and Sundays under a five and ten cent admission policy. The house is aptly called the Dreamland.

REETHS MADE DEALS WITH MERCHANTS FOR SPECIAL ADVERTISING

Like many other Round Tablers these days, Fred Reeths, Jr., manager of the Sheboygan Theatre, Sheboygan, Wisc., is working every little gag he can think of to boost trade and, at the same time, keep down overhead expense attached to special advertising.

For instance, three samples of circulars we have at hand did not cost him a cent outside of distribution, for reason that all carried a tie-up ad with some local merchant.

One was a little 3 x 8 inch folder headed on outside, "How to Be Popular," and at bottom, "In One Lesson." The inside copy instructed the reader that this could be attained by taking the girl friend to "Girl of the Rio" at the Sheboygan and after the show to stop at a nearby shop and treat her to a Dolores Del Rio Sundae. Another 6 x 8 inch folder, announcing "New Bargain Prices Now In Effect," was entirely taken care of by a drug store ad on the third page. Still another tied-up with a dry-cleaning establishment advertisement, with theatre copy stating, "Brand New Fords—$23.50—Would not create any more of a sensation than 'Fireman, Save My Child', etc.



Also note by the accompanying photo that Reeths used a gorilla outfit bally when exploiting "Rue Morgue." The "gorilla" was hauled around town in a small horse-drawn vehicle that resembled a miniature circus wagon and attracted plenty of attention.

SURPRISED, WALTER?

So would we if all of a sudden we found an almost forgotten picture of ourself on the Club pages. It's Walter Morris, in the flesh. (Who are the pretty damsels?) Pardon our curiosity.

REVIVAL NIGHTS!

As a means of stimulating business on off nights many theatres have inaugurated a sort of revival idea in which the patrons vote for several pictures released since the inception of talkies. These are then presented as an added attraction to the regular performance on specified nights.

Many of the former "big" pictures are well worth running and ought to find plenty of extra dollars for the box office. In most cases such pictures can be bought at a very low price, making it a practical idea all around.

We suggest that you give a little thought to "Revival Nights" and see if they can help you keep out of the red during the coming warm weather.

FORM LETTERS ARE SOURCE OF PROFIT FOR JOHN MEDFORD

A form letter has been found an excellent means of bringing in patrons from both local and out-of-town communities by John Medford, manager of the Princess Theatre, Oxford, N. C.

This letter was printed on regular theatre stationery by a local printer, space left at top for insertion of name and address by typewriter. Here's one that went out and returned most satisfactory results on "Love Affair." Note that it's short and to the point:

> "Do you remember what grand entertainment was offered in "Divorcee" and "Strangers May Kiss," with Norma Shearer? Well, we have another picture by the same author, Ursula Parrott, author of best-sellers. It is "Love Affair," a Columbia Picture with Dorothy Mackaill in the leading role, and it is coming to the Princess Theatre, Oxford, N. C., on March 23-24. This is certainly an event to write about!
> Again Miss Parrott tells a story of modern youth—their cry for freedom—their craving for thrills—romance—adventure! A glamorous story in a brilliant setting, acted by a notable cast. Lovely Dorothy Mackaill has for her leading man, Humphrey Bogart, recruited from the New York stage. Hale Hamilton, Astrid Allwyn and Jack Kennedy play supporting roles and Thornton Freeland directed.
> Make it "your affair" to see "Love Affair" at the Princess Theatre, Oxford, N. C., on March 23-24.
> Sincerely,
> The Management.

For soliciting trade from adjacent towns where there are no theatres, Medford has had better luck with a letter such as the above than any other kind of advertising and is bringing it to the attention of other Club members who may be similarly situated. He mails the letters about once a week and signs them with his own name.

We hope the next time he gets in touch with the Club he'll see that a clearer and better photo is enclosed. We have one or two at hand but all are too faint, or lacking in detail, to show you what this Round Tabler has been doing. We can see by one that he tied-up with the local fire department to exploit "Fireman Save My Child," and he tells us that the stunt attracted wide attention in Oxford. The truck was driven about town in the morning and evening and made stops at two schools during lunch time. The picture went over very well, despite severely cold weather.

Medford advises us that he intends becoming a regular contributor to this department and we hope he'll keep his word. Many of our members are located in towns just like Oxford, as to size, etc., and we're sure his tips will be appreciated.

MacPHERSON OPENING NEW THEATRE OUT IN NORTHERN CALIFORNIA

As we pound out these few words, Granville MacPherson, proprietor of a new theatre under construction at Nubieber, Calif., must be just about ready to throw open the doors of his house to a waiting public.

MacPherson's town is one of the more recent developments in Lassen County and the community is all pepped up over its new playhouse. The B. F. Shearer Company of Seattle has equipped the theatre with all that is modern and there's no reason why Nubieber and all of Big Valley folk should not receive the best in entertainment. That means that Mack will be doing some stunts in the way of selling his shows.

WARNER-CLEVELAND STAFF RATED STORY ON CAGNEY STOP-OFF

On none too authentic rumors that James Cagney, Warner star in "The Crowd Roars," would make a short stop-off in Cleveland, Ohio, to meet Milt Jones, auto race driver, some 50 men and women were on hand to greet him when he stepped off the train. Jones separated Cagney from the crowd and the two strolled about the platform, talking over experiences at the Indianapolis track, until the conductor signaled departure of the train.

We're indebted to "Hank" Harold, art director of Warner Theatres, for the newspaper clipping describing the above incident, which was good for a three-column cut and story in a leading paper. It is assumed that Sidney Dannenberg engineered this publicity stunt.

Which just goes to prove that there is "dough" hiding in every corner for the smart showmen who seek out those corners. As we write this bit, we are wondering how many other showmen would have taken advantage of the opportunity of grabbing this choice morsel of publicity.

AD ARTISTS FOR SMALL CITIES!

Apparently an ad artist for theatres outside large key cities is far from an impossibility. To judge from the type of "flash" ads being used at the theatres in Malden, Mass., a good ad artist is a worthwhile addition to the theatre's overhead.

Here are three group ads used on separate days. Note the variety of style and the amount of black ink employed for the purpose of making these ads, apparently, eye-arresting in many ways.

The ad artist's salary carried by three theatres makes its economical to all three and gives them a marvelous break in business-getting ads. Other theatres, especially those operating two or more in one town, should investigate the possibilities of such an arrangement.

ATTRACTIVE LOBBY FEATURED CAMPAIGN MADE BY PAUL SHORT

An attractive lobby featured the selling campaign made on "Hell Divers," by Paul Short, manager of the Melba Theatre, Dallas, Texas. It was arranged as follows: The background was snow-white. The title "Hell Divers" and the names Gable and Beery were in red. All copy and descriptive adjectives, the names Clark and Wallace and the remainder of the cast were in dark blue. Swooping planes flying in formation served as background for all copy in shades of light blue.

Cutouts of Beery and Gable were placed in the lobby in naval uniform. A naval instrument worth twenty-five hundred dollars was displayed during the run of the picture with an attendant to explain its uses to patrons. Several large propellers and engines rounded out a perfectly appointed aviation lobby.

There were fifty word announcements daily over radio stations KRLD and WRR plugging the picture as "the mightiest epic of the air."

Certainly there are some worthwhile suggestions for lobby display in Short's contribution and we're passing it along for the benefit of those who have yet to play this picture.

HERE'S A MERCHANT WHO KEEPS HIS EYE PEELED FOR TIE-UPS

Somewhat a reversal of the usual situation, there's a book store proprietor in New York City, Charlie Landau by name, who ties in with pictures without being sought after by any particular exploitation man.

Recently, in connection with "Rue Morgue," Landau went bally with a vengeance and used a man made up as an ape at his Beekman and Nassau street store to draw attention to sale of a 75c edition of the Poe book.

Landau has found that such exploitation brings big sales on any novel he features in this manner, and that it is particularly unique in his section (downtown financial) of the city. He's a man who doesn't wait for some manager to approach him but acts on his own initiative. Which is just a reminder that merchants are in a receptive state of mind for any stunt that will increase sales.

JONES SAYS PICTURE DID THE JOB, BUT WE GUESS HE DID A SHARE

No doubt a number of our members will recall a news item in the trade press several weeks ago to the effect that George Jones, manager of Loew's Theatre, Wilmington, Del., had achieved the signal honor of making a success out of a house long in the red. That excited interest at Club headquarters and we dropped this showman a line to find out what it was all about. His answer modestly stated that product, not Jones, was entitled to all honors. However, we still believe that the personal angle was, in a way, responsible for what happened after Jones took charge of the house and will therefore set down just what he did upon arrival in Wilmington.

Territory and people were all new to him when he first set foot in town, so the first thing he did was to make a sort of a survey of the city, gathering most of his information through conversation with storekeepers and other business men. The sum total of this was a decision that the situation sized up more as a community than a city, and a rather "ritzy" one at that, and he proceeded to work along that line.

He studiously avoided all street and theatre ballyhoo and other exploitation stunts and concentrated on the newspapers to sell his theatre and shows. He made daily trips to the newspaper offices, if for nothing more than to wish them the time of the day, and became friendly with the city editors. The net result of this today is that he can get nearly any legitimate story in all papers.

He Knows His Stuff!

He also made it a point to get acquainted with as many patrons as possible, for the reason that they appear to get a kick out of being able to say hello to the manager on the way in and tell him what they think of the show on the way out. Apparently this leads to what can be termed taking a personal interest in the theatre; hence, he spends as much time as possible in sight of patrons. This same spirit has been drilled into the usher staff, doing away with that wooden soldier effect and making them appear like human beings. They help middle-aged people on and off with their coats instead of saluting them and do many other little courtesies in a natural manner, using their own words instead of some canned phrase.

The only stunt he ever pulled that really made an impression, states Jones, was used with "Hell Divers" and resulted from a tie-up made with the Delaware National Guard. Through that organization he promoted an 8,000,000 candle power anti-aircraft searchlight for the evening and placed it in front of the theatre. Four planes flew overhead during the evening, performing all kinds of stunts, with sirens screaming, as the searchlight beam followed them through the air. Jones thought the day of skygawking was over, but traffic was tied up for blocks around when this stunt was staged.

In closing he still insists that pictures made the house what it is today and so we won't argue that point. We will, however, point out that no one but a smart showman would make as careful survey of the town as he did before deciding upon operating and advertising policies. Apparently, Jones correctly sized up the situation.

BACKHOUSE PULLED NOVEL POSTER GAG IN ENGLISH HOUSE

General appreciation of humor relating to the Scotch leads us to pass along a gag sent the Club by John J. Backhouse, manager of the Kursaal Kinema, Southend-On-The-Sea, England.

He issued a series of two hand bills, the first headed, "Missing" from his home since last Flag Day. Hugh Seymour, age 75, a native of Aberdeen, now believed to be in Southend-On-The-Sea. He left home with a clean shirt and a one pound note, and we have reason to believe he has changed neither. Where Is He? A Reward will be paid to anyone giving the information to his discovery. Report immediately to Manager, Nearest Cinema.

The second bill was headed "Found!" Balance of copy read, "The management of the 'One Bright Spot' are glad to inform their patrons that Hugh Seymour was found in their Kinema on Monday night last. On being interviewed by the 'Sporting Tines' he stated he is Not Missing a single performance at this popular theatre. He laughed at his long walk from Aberdeen, saying he would go miles to see a good program. The reason I selected the Kursaal is because Hugh (accent on U) Seymour at the Kursaal Kinema."

We also have other evidence at hand of Backhouse's advertising, consisting of several attractive teaser one-sheets on several pictures. They are done in blacks, blues, reds, greens, etc., with striking originality as to copy. The Club will be glad to hear more about stunts pulled by its English representative.

WARNER PUBLICITY STAFF IN NEW YORK USING 'TALKIEGRAM'

Warner Bros. publicity department in New York City recently inaugurated a nine weeks "Talkiegram" stunt in order to gauge audience preferences.

A two-week advance trailer announcement explains the stunt and lists the awards, which will be given those who correctly identify unnamed portions of pictures run off on films played during the nine weeks. "Why Warner product is enjoyable" is also a subject for comment by participants. Replies will be used to prepare future advertising copy.

The above is based upon the idea of furnishing an incentive to people to attend consecutive performances and appears practical only when used by a producer organization. However, it was a good stunt and if some one will volunteer information just how the idea can be used by an exhibitor who plays a variety of company product, we'll gladly pass the word along.

Abelson At Omaha

Art Abelson, former South Dakota district manager for Publix with headquarters at Minneapolis, has been transferred to Omaha, Neb., from where he will look after Publix houses in Grand Island, Hastings, Columbus and Kearney. These cities were formerly a part of the district supervised by Gerald Gallagher but will now be split between the two men. The division is under control of Evert R. Cummings.

HOLIDAYS

Webster defines "holiday" as a day of exemption from labor, of rest or diversion—a period of recreation.

A period of recreation—the masses of today seek their recreation in motion picture theatres; therefore, every holiday has a particular value to an exhibitor . . . in a great many cases, special matinees are held—holiday prices are charged, and it therefore behooves every manager and every exhibitor to avail himself of every aid to attract attention to his theatre during a holiday—to carry out the holiday spirit and to encourage the maintenance of its observation . . . there are various ways to do this—special holiday programs arranged, embodying subjects that are symbolic of that particular holiday—decorating the lobby and theatre properly . . . special holiday borders on ads, programs, trailer announcements and speaking of trailer announcements, one of the most effective means of creating holiday spirit is a holiday trailer, especially if it is built to carry out the spirit of that particular holiday, embodying symbolic music, illustrations, copy, etc. . . . for instance, I saw one on Memorial Day which was splendidly done, embodying beautiful symbolic illustrations, living figures, music, a stirring message delivered by an offstage voice and bugler playing Taps as the poppies in Flanders Field and the crosses on the graves, move slowly in the background. . . . There was a time when only the biggest theatres put on special holiday presentations, but with the advent of sound it is now possible for any theatre man to put on a very excellent holiday program. . . . So start out with the next holiday, Memorial Day. Start working on it now, build it up, make it mean extra dollars to your box office. It will, if you get behind it and push it.

BOB ENOCH ANOTHER CLUB MEMBER WHO CAN PROMOTE NO-COST ADS

We note that Robert T. Enoch, manager of the Strand Theatre, Parkersburg, West Va., is another one of those showmen who can go out among local merchants and promote newspaper display advertising at no cost to theatre other than a few guest tickets.

One of the ads shown here will convey a good idea of what this Round Tabler is getting away with. The ad ran almost the full length of the page and you will note that mats and copy pertaining to Dietrich and "Shanghai Express" practically stole the whole layout. The few inches of copy we cropped at the bottom carried small type and store signature.

Another large three-column ad before us discloses that fifty per cent of the space plugged "Passionate Plumber" and that a guest ticket would be given free of charge by merchant with every pair of "Foto Fan" stockings. Still another half-page ad tied up "Shanghai Express" with the opening of a new dry cleaning company. Guest tickets were offered as an incentive to new customers. We also note that he succeeded in grabbing a generous slice of an ad inserted by a department store for a plug on a Laurel-Hardy comedy, with no mention of any tie-up at all.

Looks as though Enoch will be giving some competition to Pennsylvania Harry Stern in the costless ad racket. That's good, and maybe it will pep up some of the other fellows in this organization in the matter of showing their hand. Send in examples of your work, Club members, and we'll pass along the dope. If you are good enough salesmen to grab half space in merchants' ads for a few guest tickets, it's certainly worth trying out these days.

Baltimore Bouquets

Bouquets are being bestowed these days on Bill Saxton, M. A. Mechanic, Louis Rome, Fred C. Schanberger and Arnold Stoltz for their parts in bringing about the Sunday show victory at the polls a short time ago.

He will make his headquarters at the Ridgewood.

Preston entered showbusiness back in the days when vaudeville was outsmarting films and has since held important positions with many of the leading circuits in New York City, Brooklyn and on Long Island.

CHARLIE CARROLL IS PUTTING OVER SHOWS AT AUDUBON THEATRE

Back in harness again at the Audubon Theatre, New York City, Charles P. Carroll, well known New York and New Jersey showman, has been busily engaged with the selling of entertainment to Manhattanites who live in the neighborhood of Broadway and 165th street.

Chas. Carroll

One of the main attractions at the Audubon in recent months was Ed Lowry, whose novel presentations were enthusiastically received by a majority of patrons. While there an Ed Lowry Club was started and a considerable membership was obtained among the school pupils. Recruits who could sing, dance or play some instrument were sought out and divided into class squads of four and a Captain. Special prizes, contests, entertainment and various gifts featured each weekly Saturday morning program. Club members were admitted for 15c.

Carnival Week and the progressive presentation of a 12-unit program has been another feature of Audubon shows since Carroll's arrival. Here, for instance, is what appeared on one of the vaude-style heralds issued for the occasion: "1. Sol. Kline, leads the Variety Vaudeville Orchestra; 2. The Girl in the Tonneau, a Riot of Comedy; 3. Giants of the Jungle, You'll Like This One; 4. Villain's Curse, Just a Funny Cartoon; 5. Current News Events; 6. The Menace, Edgar Wallace's Last Work; 7. Serlany Four, Roman Posing and Aerial Novelty; 8. Joe Wong, the Chinese Crosby-Colombo-Vallee; 9. Foster & Van, Dark Rhythm; 10. Jones and Lee, and Their Own Little Show; 11. Charlie Foy, Last of the Famous Foy Funsters; 12. Bob Alton's Dainty Dozen." And you have what was billed as the Golden Dozen and a "Wow of a Show."

The Audubon is also sending out each week a newsette called the "Broadway Bumble Bee," which contains theatre gossip, scene cuts, fan notes, etc. It's a newsy little publication and looks as though it might be aptly filling the want in that direction.

We also hear that Carroll has a circulating library gag in effect at his house whereby patrons may obtain books without any charge other than paying admission to the theatre. We'd like to hear more about this if Charles P. can find time to put us wise. Just as soon as we can pick up the information it will be passed along to others. In the meantime we'll wish him continued success.

The Cohens and Kellys

The thousands of Cohens and Kellys in the New York City telephone directory inspired the Mayfair Theatre, RKO first run house, to circularize the names when exploiting "Cohens and Kellys in Hollywood." The letter pointed out the advantages of taking a trip through the Movie City with the famous pair of comedians and an enclosed "Studio Pass" entitled members of the Cohen and Kelly Association to see the picture upon payment of regular admission.

ALL ABOARD FOR A FREE VACATION STUNT; PLAN YOUR CAMPAIGN!

If You're Interested in Promoting One of These Popular Affairs, Now Is the Time for Tie-ups With Hotels and Transports

Contact Your Merchant-Friends For Outfits for the Winners; Call On Your Newspaper Editor and Pave Way for Stories

Now that vacation time is just around the corner, many managers will be thumbing over their campaign books to refresh memories on that "Free Vacation—Popularity" stunt which proved so successful the last time it was promoted. To serve as a reminder we are submitting a plan followed out last summer by Thomas D. Soreiro, Warner showman, who, at that time, was working in the C. J. Latta Ohio division. Changes can be made to suit local conditions, but we believe the backbone of the scheme can be applied to most any locality.

The First Steps

The first steps to take, of course, are to pick your resort, cruise, or what have you, and then arrange for tie-ups with both hotel or steamship and the transportation company. Your locality will naturally determine to a considerable extent a trip which will be of interest to your patrons. It is generally agreed upon that a change of climate carries a strong element of appeal to most people. If you are located in the South a trip North becomes logical; if in the inland North, the seashore becomes attractive. Likewise the mountains for those who breathe salt air the year around. And don't forget that the big cities hold a strong attraction for those who have to spend practically all of the year in the smaller towns and cities and the country.

Cooperation Assured

Judging from results of past tie-ups made with resorts and transportation concerns, those in charge have shown their willingness to fully cooperate in every possible way toward the success of the scheme in lieu of the advertising received. The plan used last summer by the Warner managers out in Ohio called for four free vacations. The point of destination chosen for the winners was the new Netherland-Plaza Hotel, Cincinnati, which is said to be the very last word in modern hostelries. A descriptive letter, setting forth all advantages of a week spent at this hotel, was sent to all managers in the division, so that they could disclose the necessary information to patrons and as material to use for newspaper readers, etc. Pamphlets were also supplied by the hotel management.

Stipulations

The contest opened June 28 and closed July 25 and it was stipulated that the winners must use their privileges before September 15. Ballots for votes to be cast for the favorites were distributed at the box office by the transportation company and through a number of merchants. In the campaign outlined here four free trips were given. This, of course, is entirely optional and depends upon local conditions.

While the box office was the main source of ballots, each good for 10 votes when an admission was purchased, it was arranged with the bus company to have all ticket stubs act as a two-for-one when accompanied with a paid admission. The company served as a carrier for people in a number of adjacent cities and made up some 20,000 eight by four inch cards for distribution during run of contest. One side of the card plugged the bus concern and the other carried the following copy: "Winners of the Warner Bros. Ohio Theatres Vacation Trips Will Ride Colonial Stages. Vote Now for Your Favorite." All stages carried a banner on backs and it was arranged to have one bannered on both sides routed through the city during certain hours of the day, parking in front of the theatres at intervals. Photographs and other material were also sent to theatre for lobby display.

Tom Wear, who was in charge of the Warner house at Elyria, Ohio, at the time this stunt was put over, and lately with Smalley Theatres, Cooperstown, N. Y., tells us that he tied up with the local dealer in Lincoln automobiles for the free transportation of the winners to Cincinnati, a matter of 300 miles, in a sedan car. In exchange he gave the dealer credit on screen and in other advertising matter. This, in addition to promoting over $100 worth of sport clothing and accessories for the most popular girl.

Several Tie-ups

A local newspaper, merchants and a commercial photographer were also tied-in for their parts in the campaign. The paper was sold on the idea of running ballots in each issue for duration of contest, each good for 10 votes when cut out and presented at the box office. On the final week of the contest, in connection with a drive made by the paper on subscription, it was arranged to give certificates good for 250 votes to all those subscribing to the paper for one year, 500 votes for two years and 1,000 for three years. The paper was also tied in for the insertion of readers on standing of contestants.

The merchants were tied-up for the purpose of securing free of charge several articles for use by the winners when making the trip. These included summer sport suits, traveling bags, golf bags, golf clubs, sport shoes and other awards. Ballots were also distributed by the merchants, each good for 10 votes on a sale involving 50 cents or over. It was arranged to deposit these ballots in a box provided for this purpose in the theatre lobby. It is thought practical to have this box in the inner lobby rather than on the outside.

Obviously an inside ballot box would work in closer harmony with the box office.

The tie-up with the photographer was made for the purpose of taking photos of the leading contestants each week. These were displayed in the theatre lobby or, as in some cases, used by newspapers to illustrate a story.

Trailers, Lobby, etc.

So far we have briefly touched on the promotional end of the campaign, its advertising angles and methods of balloting, and we now come to the subject of trailers and other sales work done by the theatre. Two trailers were used, one in explanation of the trips and the other to plug the hotel. Both were made up at no cost to the house.

In order to maintain interest among the entries contact was regularly established by personal letters. Following is a copy of one:

"Dear Miss Blank: In checking over the votes cast in Blank Theatre's Popularity Contest, I find that 350 votes have been cast to your credit. In this contest we are making 27 awards, including two vacation trips, all expenses paid, to Cincinnati via Colonial Stages. (Number of awards depends on supplementary tie-ups.) Among the awards there are (then list whatever you have besides trips). May I suggest that you call and see me personally at the theatre, bringing with you a recent photograph of yourself."

Blackboard Important

Along with the photographs of contestants in the lobby, with names printed underneath, a blackboard was used to record the standings from day to day. This was made about the size of a three-sheet and large enough to carry 20 or more names. Since the board is the barometer of your contest, it appears advisable to make it as live as possible, changing names and copy each day and, if practical, having a baby spot play on it. It goes without saying that it should be given a prominent place in the lobby.

Your Own Ideas

There will be many other ideas which will come up for consideration while planning a campaign such as outlined above. Some may be able to effect a gathering of all contestants on the stage one day of each week; if not all, then the leaders, but it seems advisable to get as many as possible, for there may be some girl low in standing who may have enough stage personality to put her up among the winners.

The merchant tie-ups will also come in for a big share of the campaign. The more awards, the more important the contest becomes, and advertising should more than compensate for cost of the gifts. It might also be arranged to make a lobby display of several articles.

Now's the Time!

At any rate, the Warner boys out in Ohio proved that the stunt can be made a money-maker for theatres, and so, with their compliments, we're passing this skeletonized plan along to club members. Vacations will begin in another month or so and it's not too early to lay the foundation work for your Free Vacation Contest. It's an excellent opportunity to get out and hit the firing line and find out how good a promoter you are.

HOLLYWOOD PREMIERE HELD IN WASHINGTON ON "BATTALION" FILM

Residents of Washington, D. C., were recently treated to a real old-fashioned Hollywood Premiere when Universal decided to stage the World's first showing of "Doomed Battalion" in the nation's capital. Accordingly the home office exploitation staff, assisted by special exploiteer Eddie Hitchcock, supervised the opening campaign and received splendid support from Ralph Ravenscroft, manager of the Rialto Theatre, and Rodney Collier, its publicity director.

A news-review of the event, large photos of dignitaries who attended the event and other newspaper stories attest the interest which three leading newspapers of the city displayed in the event. It was not treated as a theatre opening but as an important social happening among those prominent in political and civic life of the Capital. A column and a half story in the "Post" listed Cabinet members, Ambassadors, military and naval attaches of all legations, members of the Senate, and many other political people of note among those who received special invitations.

The 75 piece band of the local Veterans of Foreign Wars was promoted for a march through the main streets of the downtown section, later playing for one hour in front of the theatre for the opening ceremonies. A local military post cooperated to the extent of loaning searchlights for the projection of giant beams of light into the skies. A special police detail was on hand to keep the crowd in order. Local newspapers assigned cameramen to take shots of the celebrities entering the theatre.

The "ALL QUIET on the WESTERN FRONT" of 1932!

The advance campaign included circularization of important Italian, Austrian and German individuals and societies, high schools and clubs; house to house distribution of heralds; distribution of special blotters in office buildings; novelty dodgers with imitation stick of dynamite and copy, "Blown To Bits," in office buildings and parked cars; newspaper campaign ten days ahead with slogans such as "Watch for the World Premiere—The Picture Terrific—The All Quiet of 1932," etc.; ads for $3 top opening run far enough in advance to sell out to the society people; front decorated with flags of all nations; drive on foreign population due to international cast of picture; plugs over radio; tickets and awards for best 100 word dispatches as outlined in newspaper stunt; classified tie-up, and numerous window tie-ups.

Many campaigns on this picture will be based on work outlined in the above paragraphs. There are any number of suggestions that can be adapted to other cosmopolitan cities or scaled down to suit local conditions. Comb through them, if this one is on your list, and file the ideas away.

BODIE ENLISTED THE ONE AND ONLY COXEY TO EXPLOIT PICTURE

If any of our members think that the Coxey Army was a myth we're here to let you know that the one and only Coxey is no less than the Mayor of Massillon, Ohio, where Harry F. Bodie manages the Lincoln Theatre for the Brothers Warner.

We have a newspaper clipping before us showing the famous Mr. Coxey all dolled up in a Fireman's outfit and presumably plugging "Fireman Save My Child," as the caption intimates. But it then goes on to explain that "Joe Brown had nothing on him when he was a volunteer sixty years ago in Danville."

Coxey is a well known personality out his way and Bodie tells us that he is a candidate for next president. We can well believe that the photo received its share of attention.

Bodie has a man's size job on his hands out in his neck of Ohio and we'll be interested in learning how he's making out. What it takes to put a shoulder to the wheel he's got, and we and all his fellow Round Tablers wish him success.

GEORGE ROTSKY USED BIG GUNS IN CAMPAIGN WAGED ON ARLISS FILM

A full page announcement in all English papers in the city was the big gun fired in campaign made on "Man Who Played God," by George Rotsky, veteran show-manager of the Palace Theatre, Montreal, Canada. Headlines in red ink screamed, "It Will Live in Your Memory Forever—George Arliss," and name of theatre. He also used large display ads in all Montreal French newspapers and the Jewish Adler, following the big shot with three column ads which ran the length of the page.

Rotsky's confidence in the drawing power of the picture was justified by a gross that went considerably above the house average, during the week that Lenten season took its toll at all theatres.

Several years ago we used to receive interesting material from this showman on the art of showmanship and we're glad to be in touch with him again. We know of no one better qualified to make worthwhile suggestions and hope that he will find time to drop the Club a line now and then.

LIKES BAND WAGON!

From what we hear about W. T. A. Webb, manager of Smalley's Sidney Theatre, Sidney, N. Y., he's "just c-r-a-z-y" about the big sound truck pictured above. It's the regular company bally that makes the rounds of the Smalley Circuit and you can believe us when we tell you that Webb let the whole town know it was around when it recently paid Sidney a two-day visit.

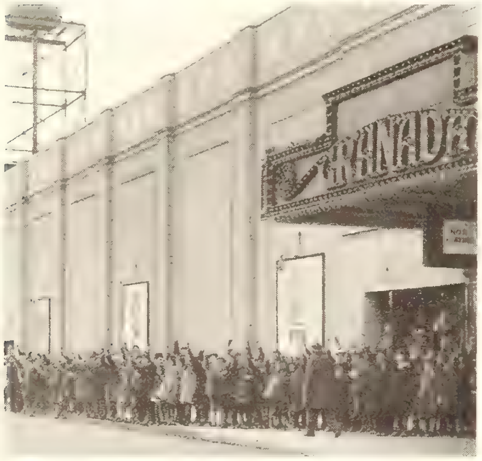
BUCK JONES RANGER CLUB GOING STRONG AMONG THE KIDDIES

Columbia Pictures Corp. has a new stunt for showmen interested in organization of the juvenile element called the Buck Jones Rangers' Club which, according to its sponsors, already boasts a membership of over 500,000 boys and girls in various parts of the country.

A complete plan of organization has been prepared by Captain F. Heath Cobb, writer and juvenile organizer, which is claimed to be practical for both large and small communities. The sponsors are also backing up the move with advertisements in leading boys' magazines, one of which is said to have brought over 10,000 replies in two weeks.

A letter to Columbia from R. L. Nowell, manager of the Cherokee Theatre, Monroe, Ga., enthusiastically comments on the initial meeting of his unit when several hundred boys and girls marched to the theatre as a body. The Mayor, Superintendent of School various Women's Clubs and other organizations cooperated to the fullest extent. Nowell was assisted by Ted Toddy, Columbia exploiteer.

In order to facilitate openings of these clubs Columbia has prepared two trailers, one advance and one current. The advance presents Jones telling about the Club and showing a few feats in roping. The current trailer brings Jones and the National officers to the local theatre for the opening meeting, during which the pledge of the Rangers is portrayed. A manual containing details of rodeos, pageants and programs which may be staged by clubs without involving much time on part of the manager, or causing any great outlay of money, has been prepared. Club and all material is copyrighted in order to protect theatre-members.



Buck Jones is a likeable screen personaity and one likely to impress the younger generation. As far as the writer's opinion is concerned, he was one of the best of the western stars in silent pictures and one of the few who, in addition to being able to pull sensational screen stunts, could really act. The writer also happened to catch a Jones picture, "High Speed," a short time ago, and was most agreeably surprised at the entertainment value contained in that particular picture. It was apparent that Jones had little difficulty in adapting himself to the new order of the screen.

OVER 1100 KIDDIES TURNED OUT FOR BIG PARTY HELD BY GATES

Easter egg hunts are slightly out of season at this writing, but we cannot wait until next year to record that Arnold Gates, manager of Loew's Granada Theatre, Cleveland, Ohio, put over a corker out in his city a short time ago.

Gates tied-up with his community newspaper and over twenty merchants to stage his big event, and the net result was attendance of over eleven hundred youngsters between the ages of two and fifteen years. Over fifty awards, consisting of live bunnies, roller skates, puppies, kodaks, candy, baseballs, bats, scooters, hats and numerous other articles were distributed from the theatre stage to the fortunate ones.

The paper and merchant tie-ups gave the hunt wide publicity and it naturally reacted most favorably to the theatre. If some of our members didn't hold their Easter Egg Hunt this season, file this tip away for next year and maybe it will serve as a reminder that it's a good method to employ as a stimulator of good will among many elements in your community. Thanks to Gates for calling our attention to the stunt.

"JAMEY" SENDS CLUB UNIQUE AD RUN BY MISSOURI EXHIBITOR

We are indebted to H. E. Jameyson, advertising and publicity supervisor of the Midland Division, Fox West Coast Theatres, for calling our attention to a unique newspaper ad inserted by the manager of the Star Theatre independent house at Warrensburg, Mo. As "Jamey" states, he evidently believes in telling the truth. Here's the boxed off portion of his ad on "Freaks":

> We Do Not Recommend This—Take It Or Leave It. (head). We think the picture today is terrible. It is horrible, unreal—revolting. However, all tastes must be appealed to at some time or other. There has been demand by the public for this kind of picture—We have had many requests to show this—So here it is—but you had better stay at home.

Seems to us that the above was a darn good way to whet the curiosity of his patrons, telling them that it was an absoluteyl different sort of picture, etc. We'll make a guess that this picture can be sold along those lines, playing up the grotesque angle for all that it's worth. Thanks to you, H. E., for passing along the idea.

ROUND TABLE BIOGRAPHIES

Concluding that showbusiness offered more possibilities than the newspaper game, Herrwood E. Hobbs, present manager of the Hippodrome Theatre, Pottsville, Pa., after spending four years as reporter on a local paper, broke into the amusement business at the age of 20 as assistant manager of the Capitol Theatre, also in Pottsville.

Hobbs plugged along as assistant for one and one-half years and was then promoted to his present position, which means that he has been with Comerford and Publix ever since he entered this game.

Herrwood Hobbs

He was born in Nescopeck, Pa., April 24, 1910, and is a graduate of the Pottsville High School. He's twenty-two years old at this writing and as far as we know still unmarried. If he had to start all over again showbusiness would be his choice of a profession.

What are we going to do with him?---

What are we going to do about the most terrifying secret power that has ever threatened these United States? . . . This power-drunk terror who challenged the world when his influence ran high, but when fortune turned, his blood turned yellow, and like a whipped dog he looked to the woman he ruined to save him from his doom.

"Scarface" shows this horrifying menace stripped of his glory as he really is! Though revealing him in a pitiless spotlight, it puts the hoodlum on the run. It is a challenge to every true-blooded American citizen to combat the greatest menace this nation has ever known.

The sudden death of Frank Schaefer, former operator of the Crystal theatre and a brother of Pete and Harry Schaefer, came as a shock to everyone along Film Row. Few men have held the warm affection and esteem of his fellows to the extent that Mr. Schaefer did, and as word of his passing spread along the row his many friends expressed their sorrow. Mr. Schaefer was playing golf with Oscar Florine when he complained of feeling faint and dizzy. Starting back to the clubhouse he collapsed and died in Florine's arms. Death was attributed to heart attack.

By F. H. RICHARDSON

BLUEBOOK SCHOOL QUESTION NO. 128.—(A) Tell us just what a "condenser" does, meaning the optical sort. (B) What similarity is there in the action of a glass condenser and a curved mirror such as is used in connection with reflector type lamps. (C) Describe a plano-convex condenser such as is used in projection work. (D) Just what is a "collector" lens and why is it that? (E) What is a "converging" condensing lens and why is it that?

Answer to Question No. 121

Bluebook School Question No. 121 was: "(A) Tell us just how you would prove the fact that the ordinary arc cannot use above 60 amperes without increased proportional light loss. (B) Using the ordinary arc, in what proportion is screen illumination increased with different arc amperages, assuming the correct optical line-up to be used in each case. (C) With the ordinary arc and plano-convex condenser, is it possible to increase screen illumination by increased current flow over and above 120 amperes? (D) Is it essential to best results that there be a certain fixed carbon separation (ordinary arc) for different amperages?"

There was a good showing on this one, as follows: Lester Borst, S. Evans and C. Rau, Frank Dudiak, G. E. Doe, John Wentworth, T. Van Vaulkenburg, Bill Doe, Andrew Wells, Nic Granby, Another Doe, Charles Ray and Tom Taylor, Dan Emmerson, Dave Goldberg, Dave Lambert and Tom Davis, Andy Bailey, H. D. Tyler, John Rathburn and Dave Little, G. Tinlin, Jack Billings, Henry Edwards, Tom Murphy, Pat O'Brien, P. L. Davis, D. L. Sinklow, Dave Andrews, Robert Giddings, Aleck Giebto, P. T. Garling, William Broadbent and James Granby, Dan L. Mason, P. L. Toeping, K. L. Knight, Dave Anderson, Chick Peters, Frank Ferguson, Albert Ilks, George Deckson, Dan Holler and T. R. Peters, Andrew Breaston, Joe Daniels, D. K. Ormie, Seymour Carroll, John Cermak, Frank Davis, Frank F. Franks, D. L. Simmons, D. V. Peterson, H. D. Schofield, Thos. McGruder, Wm. Love and Sam D. Love, G. Farmann, Mike McGuire, Dave Lode, Albert Jones, Richard Singleton, F. B. Gamble, Tom McClelland and Frank Appleton, Henry B. Coates, S. Kay, Leo Garling, Hohn Williams, Andrew Wells, Peter Jackson and Bob Diglah, Alonzo Zerach and John Ahrenson.

Many of the answers were excellent. We will hear from John Wentworth on A. He says:

"The fact that with our present projector optical systems and straight arc we cannot use much in excess of 60 amperes d-c. without heavy losses of light—increasingly heavy as amperage is boosted above 60 in steps—may be proven as follows. Wash the converging condenser lens thoroughly with soap and water, rinsing and polishing it until it is very clean. Coat the convex surface with a previously prepared mixture of lampblack mixed with turpentine, or brown or other dark colored calcimine.

"Reinstall the lens in place and, using a needle point, make a very small hole in the coating on the exact center of the lens diameter. Plates of thin metal may be used, with suitable holes drilled in them, but I prefer the coating for the reason that unless the metal be in actual contact with the lens surface at the point where the hole is, the results won't be quite what they should be.

"With the hole completed, strike the arc, and it will be found that at about 60 amperes the resultant spot at the aperture will just about cover the entire aperture opening. If the amperage be further increased the central pin hole will be found to project a spot which exceeds the aperture in size, which of course indicates loss.

"By making other pin holes at different distances from the center, the effect may be observed. Finally, at about 120 amperes, it will be found that the spots of light from even the outer zones of the condenser entirely cover the aperture, hence the entire condenser is working up to its maximum capacity, so far as has to do with that size of aperture."

NEW FILM UNHURT BY GLARING LIGHTS

New photographic effects in the studio, are forecast by MGM with the use of a newly developed "non halation" film, with which it is possible to photograph any glaring light, with the camera pointing directly at the light source, without the "fog" which ruins the rest of the picture, resulting. The film was used at a recent Hollywood opening, when studio arc lights shone directly into the camera lens. All incidental matter in the camera's field of vision was recorded with excellent results, it is claimed. The new film will probably be used in the studio for special effects.

Excellent, Friend Wentworth! I have heretofore suggested a thin metal plate with tiny holes drilled therein, but the coating is, I believe, in every way better. Frank Dudiak, Evans and Rau, Lester Borst, G. E. Doe, Bill Doe, Another Doe, Nic Granby and William Broadbent also supplied what I would consider 100 per cent answers to A.

Concerning Section B, S. Evans and C. Rau say, "According to the National Carbon Company's experiments, there is 160 per cent gain in screen candle-power when the current is increased from 30 to 50 amperes; 46 per cent gain in screen candle-power when the current is increased from 50 to 70 amperes; 18 per cent gain in screen candle-power when the current is increased from 70 to 90 amperes; 15 per cent gain in screen candle-power when the current is increased from 90 to 110 amperes; 12½ per cent gain in screen candle-power when the current is increased from 110 to 120 amperes."

Frank Dudiak quotes the same figures, as also do all the Does, John Wentworth, T. Van Vaulkenburg, Frank Davis, P. L. Toeping, Peter Jackson, Dave Goldberg and Nic Granby. Lester Borst says:

"The greatest increase in screen illumination, as amperage is increased from zero to 120, will be between zero and 60 amperes, using the ordinary arc of course. Increasing the current flow from 25 to 60 will result in an indicated illuminometer increase of approximately 180 per cent. In excess of about 60 amperes, however, the gain will fall off with increased rapidity with each jump in amperage, until an increase from 100 to 120 amperes will show an improvement of only 15 per cent in screen illumination. As the tests by which these results were arrived at were laboratory conducted, they clearly illustrate the correctness of the results arrived at by experiments described in section A of this question."

(C) G. E. Doe says, "Using an ordinary plano-convex condenser and the ordinary arc, when 120 amperes, or thereabouts is reached, the whole condenser diameter is working up to its maximum capacity, assuming the aperture to be of standard dimensions. If the aperture be made smaller, then this would occur below 120 amperes. If larger, above that figure. When the condenser is working at maximum capacity, no more light, or approximately no more can be got through to the screen."

(D) William Broadbent answers thus: "It is essential to best results, either with the ordinary arc, the reflector type arc or the H. I. arc, that a certain fixed carbon separation be maintained for each different current strength or amperage. This is especially important with the high intensity arc, though very important with them all.

Current Activities Of the S. M. P. E.

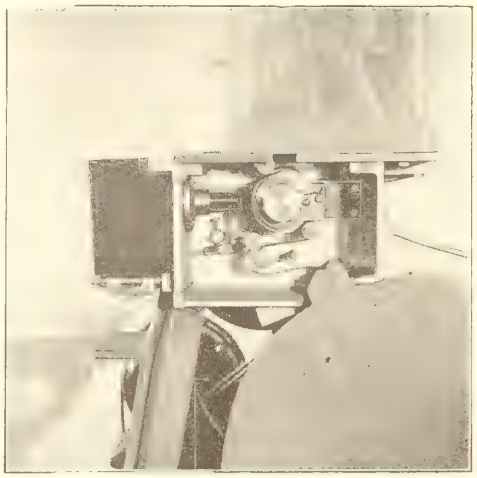
Among the various subjects under consideration by the Sound Committee of the S.M.P.E., is that of determining and studying the many elements upon which the faithful reproduction of sound in a theatre depends. The first part of this work consists in outlining these various elements, in order more easily to assign to each the importance it deserves—that is, to list them in as nearly the order of their importance as possible—and finally to classify them according to their nature and their occurrence in sound reproducing systems.

By so doing, the program which the committee is to follow in making its study of conditions requisite to good reproduction, will of necessity construct itself. And—having been so constructed, those elements of the list possessing characteristics that are somewhat similar, will admit of being placed in groups, and so facilitate the study of what may be done to diminish whatever difficulties may be recognized in them, and to segregate items that are amenable to standardization.

The first part of the study involves the listing of all the possible sources of distortion that may be found in recording and reproducing systems, and to make a bibliography regarding these sources of distortion. The Sound Committee has already undertaken to study some of the elements of this classification. The sub-committee whose function it is to study the variations that occur in making negative exposures has already rendered its preliminary report. In this report it is pointed out that the principle causes of variations in negative exposure lie in (1) the source of light, (2) the exposing device, (3) the film characteristics, and (4) the method of processing the film. Each of these causes must be subject to control, hence the committee is carefully looking into the means that may, and ought to be, used for controlling them, the proper means of adjusting them, and the proper kind of equipment that ought to be used in the first place.

The sub-committee on frequency characteristics is also working on the problem of attaining fidelity of reproduction, but is confining its attention to the recording devices only. In particular, the sub-committee is endeavoring to indicate the adjustments of the slit azimuth requisite to good recording, and to determine where, if any, compensation should be made for losses that occur in recording. It is the opinion of the sub-committee that no compensation should be made for such losses in the reproducing apparatus, but that it is preferable that the frequency characteristic of the reproducing system be as flat as possible, from the photoelectric cell to the loud speakers. All compensation for losses incurred in recording should be made in the recording apparatus itself. It is also the opinion of the sub-committee that all compensation should be based on 0.5-mil light slits, both in recording and reproducing. Methods of adjusting the azimuth of the slit in the recorder are to be recommended, as it is felt that continual checks of this adjustment are necessary in order to assure satisfactory reproduction at frequencies above 5,000 cycles per second.



SYNCROFILM

Built Like a Watch

How many years have you carried your watch? How often have you had it repaired? If you paid more than a dollar for it, the odds are long that you've had it for years and except for occasional cleaning it has been in the shop only through accident.

That's how we build Syncrofilm—to run steadily for years. Practically all the calls for parts and service have been because of accident.

We don't use jeweled bearings, but we plate them with chromium, which has much the same effect. We fit them to a fractional thousandth of an inch so that they run like the bearings of a watch. That's why Syncrofilm makes no more noise than a watch—a yard away you can't hear it at all.

Yet this is only the part you can see—your ears tell you that Syncrofilm's unique design is as good as its superlative workmanship. The most natural, accurate sound reproduction you ever heard comes from Syncrofilm. That's what your customers gladly pay for.

We guarantee Syncrofilm. Your money back if you are not satisfied. Give Syncrofilm an audition. Write and we'll tell you how.

Projection Screens Committee

In the course of its activities, the Projection Screens Committee has collected material which demands standardization, and for this reason the Standards Committee of the S.M.P.E. has been asked to act upon it. This material includes the following:

(1) Acoustic Factors: Establishment of and agreement upon, of methods used in testing acoustic materials and auditoriums, and standardization of tolerances as regards frequency characteristics of motion picture screens.

(2) Light Reflection: It is desirable that measurements of light reflected from motion picture screens be made with the light incident upon the test sample at a prescribed angle above the normal, the particular angle to be determined later by the committee. The reflected light should be measured in a horizontal plane and in a vertical plane containing the light beam, both being normal to the sample. This procedure leads to results more directly comparable with conditions existing in theatres.

(3) Definitions: As some confusion exists concerning the acceptations in the commercial field and in the engineering field, of the words "specular,". "reflective," and "directive," as applied to beaded and metallic screens, the Standards Committee is asked to decide upon the recommended usage of these words. In view of the fact that all screens reflect, it is felt that the adjective "reflective," as applied to the beaded screen, may be misleading. The recommendation is made that the term "directive" be applied to the beaded screen inasmuch as it implies a property peculiar to this type of screen; namely, that of directing a large portion of the incident light back into the source.

(4) Miscellaneous: The relation between the width of the screen and the distance of the front row of seats, from the screen should be established. An earlier study of this problem by the committee indicated that a desirable recommendation is that the distance between the front row of seats and the screen should measure ⅞ of a foot for each foot of screen width. The Standards Committee is asked to study the problem and to act upon this recommendation or any modification of it that the study may indicate. However, this problem, due to the influence of balconies and other structural limitations of the theatre, in addition to the problem of establishing standards of screen sizes, has had to await final action on standardization of the projector aperture.

Among the various problems now being considered by the Projection Screens Committee are (1) new developments in screens, including metal, embossed—and any other types; (2) standardization, referring to sizes of screens, requisite illumination and methods of making optical measurements of screens, the definition of brightness, acoustical ratings of screens, proper sizes of screen to install in theatres; (3) reflection loss characteristics of screens; (4) tolerable variations of brightness across the width of the screen, and variation of brightness as a function of the seat location; (5) characteristic of screens for 16-mm. projection.

RIESENFELD WINS ROYAL WELCOME WITH HIS 80 MUSICIANS AT THE ROXY

Inaugural Program of Conductor and Composer Is Played to One of Most Enthusiastic Audiences of the 'Cathedral'

Broadway welcomed back its own this week end as Dr. Hugo Riesenfeld, distinguished conductor and composer, presented his inaugural program at the Roxy "Cathedral." Dr. Riesenfeld chose for the first part of the overture Tchaikovsky's "Capriccio Italien," playing it in varied arrangements and to one of the most enthusiastic audiences the theatre has ever held. He followed this up, as he put it, with proof that his 80 musicians could play popular numbers as well as classics. Miss Ann Ronell's entrancing song, "Rain on the Roof," was the number. It was enhanced by rain effects on the screen and interspersed with many other appropriate effects, bringing out all of the song's intrinsic novelty.

Noted Before Reaching U.S.

Dr. Riesenfeld came to America as a young man with a reputation already made. His first engagement here was as concert master and conductor at Oscar Hammerstein's Manhattan Opera House. From there he went to the Century Opera House and served in the same capacity. Later on he conducted two seasons of operettas for Klaw and Erlanger and also composed and directed two operettas, one of which was produced by Klaw and Erlanger and the second by the Shuberts. In addition to these he also composed music for dramatic productions.

When the Rialto theatre was built he was engaged as General Musical Director for that house, also for the Rivoli. Samuel L. Rothafel (Roxy) was at that time General Managing Director for these theatres and when he left Riesenfeld was appointed to succeed him. He held this post for ten years, during this time conducting the orchestras and producing all the presentations for the stages of the Rialto, Rivoli and Criterion theatres.

Originated Classical Jazz

It was in this period that he originated Riesenfeld's Classical Jazz, which became known from coast to coast. This was the predecessor of all the special jazz arrangements which are being used by the present day celebrated jazz orchestras.

In 1928 when movieland became music conscious and each tried to outdo the other in musical extravaganzas, Dr. Riesenfeld was appointed musical director of United Artists. During his stay in California he supervised the musical settings for many of their motion picture productions. Among his accomplishments while with UA are the one-reel music productions which he created and produced, and which are still enjoying success throughout the world.

Upon his return to New York he supervised the music and composed different numbers for the last "Ziegfeld Follies."

SUCCESS DOES TURN THEIR HEADS

When Charley Washburn, who spends the money to bring 'em in at the New York Palace, saw how his show opened on Saturday, which was the switch day from two to continuous, he looked like a piece of chewed cellophane. When I walked into the theatre it was as empty as an ashcan gin bottle. The show was going on. I walked out into the lobby. "What's up? Are they rehearsing?" I asked. He just said, "You never can tell. An $18,000 show gone to hell. Lend me a dollar. I want to pay someone to keep you company." Just then George Bradley came up and I coaxed him in for nothing. It was a wonderful show—a 100 per center. I never saw artists work so hard to put it over. Perspiration ran off them in torrents. I thought that when I left the theatre it would be over the quivering corpse of Washburn.

But by the time the second show arrived people were fighting to get in. Every inch of the theatre was packed and the lobby was filled to the gutter edge. Charley had such a broad grin on his face that I couldn't tell whether it was his ears or his tonsils I could see in his mouth. "Well," he said, "you never can tell. Here's that dollar I borrowed." I took the dollar and left. The funny thing is I didn't lend him a dollar. Success does turn people's heads.—F. de T. C.

RKO To Feature Foreign Stars In Building Up of Vaudeville

RKO, in an effort pointing definitely toward strengthening of vaudeville on the circuit, will feature numerous headline acts of foreign music and variety halls, the vanguard of whom are expected in this country in June. Martin Beck, chief of RKO vaudeville, is now in Europe signing these attractions.

RKO also plans the appearance of many "old timers" of the American vaudeville stage, for short engagements. Beck has cabled the RKO home office indicating that foreign vaudeville stars are showing a "marked willingness to come to America."

REVIEWS OF ACTS

SINGERS

Madam Matzenauer
New York Roxy

This lady, a Metropolitan opera singer, has a splendid voice, but not the voice that picture audiences like. She is a great artist and in her realm clicks, but the Roxy goers gave her faint applause after she had made a fine operatic effort. Madam Matzenauer has a winning personality. She sang "My Heart at Thy Sweet Voice" from "Samson and Delilah," an Indian love song, and encored on a fast hand with "A Cottage Small." There are about six theatres in the United States where this artist could sing, if they would let her.—F. de T. C.

Boswell Sisters (3)
Brooklyn Paramount

These three popular radio stars are building up a greater popularity with their personal appearances. They are singing the songs in that style of their own that has made them so popular with radio audiences. They offer the following songs: "Everybody Loves My Baby," "My Mom," a harmony medley, and a special arrangement of "River, Stay 'way from My Door."—E. D.

Jue Fong
Detroit Fox

This Chinese tenor from Portland, Ore., has a varied repertoire that ranges from "Rigoletto" in Italian to a Chinese lullaby variation of "When Irish Eyes Are Smiling." He introduces "Rigoletto" as an excerpt from Chinese opera. And of course he sings "Poor Butterfly."

Lester Cole and His Singing Soldiers of Radio (15)
New York Academy

This company of NBC radio artists sing a number of songs that they have featured in many of their radio programs. They open with a special introduction and then go into the stirring strains of "Road to Mandalay." The Oriental motif is carried out in their dress and in the setting. The second number, a Negro spiritual, is effectively presented. The stage is darkened for this number, shadowy outlines are seen and as they start singing and chanting their clothes, painted with phosphorus, gleam. The applause on this number was of the best. The next offering, a composite of two "drinking" songs, though beautifully done, failed to please this audience. Their singing of "You're the One," which they used for closing, received enough applause to make up for the lack of it in the number before. It was apparent that this audience preferred the popular songs. Running time, 16 minutes.—E. D.

Arthur Tracy
New York Capitol

Here is a chanteur whose haunting voice and able artistry smack the audience right in the solar plexus. There is nothing just like it. It has feeling, romance, mystery and is the voice of a man with a tender understanding of life's melody. His songs are clean. He is good for any theatre—anywhere.—F. de T. C.

Murray and Allen
Detroit Fisher

A medley of Kentucky songs wins a good hand for this team, which appears in correct afternoon dress. Their second bit, a comedy song of "3,000 years ago in Egypt," is the type of thing that's not so fresh and not so hot.

Helen Broderick
New York Paramount

In the stage show, "The Band Wagon," abbreviated, and in that interlude which features a bathroom fixture shop it's quite rough and rather odorous, even to the jokes. Helen, to put a song over, talks about the God-damned elevators going up and down. That stuff, somehow, won't go in America if it does in Manhattan. They ought to know better.—F. de T. C.

Hal Byrnes
San Antonio Strand

Billed as the "Cowboy Ambassador of the Hard Luck Blues," Byrnes sings several songs, and wisecracks. He is the composer of "The Blue Bonnet Blues" and has appeared on the screen.

Mark Pepper
Oakland Paramount

Introduced as a gas-station "find," he sings "That's Why Darkies Were Born" and shows that he is the possessor of a resonant voice which might be cultivated to advantage.

NOVELTY

Trixie Friganza
Oakland Paramount

Trixie Friganza, chaperoning a brood of "discoveries," is cavorting her ample self over the stage of the Paramount theatre this week and making fun over her embonpoint and age, subjects which might be touchy with anyone else. The jolly comedienne bursts out onto the stage all in white to open the show and starts right in on her age, confessing to thirty-eight and then acknowledging that she may be confused and that this is her waist measure. She admits that she is the dame who put the flame in flaming youth and that although the years go rolling by she still can take the hills in high. Trixie is the clever ringmaster of a lively circus and introduces her "discoveries" in a manner that suggests she takes a lot of pride in them. And well she might, as there is not a dull performer in the lot. But if she discovered all of them she must harken back to prehistoric days, as there are a couple in the lot this reviewer has seen since he began attending theatres. Trixie offers some impersonations of stars of yesterday and causes near convulsions with her rendition of the Cuban rumba, with ruffled gown, scarf and all.

Ben Bernie and Band
Cincinnati Albee

"The old maestro," and his lads are seen through a scrim with Bernie announcing himself offstage. Scrim raises and Bernie appears, which is signal for prolonged applause. Entire routine is handled before microphone with amplifiers at each side of stage. Pat Kennedy, "the unmasked tenor," sings, "Lovable," "When Shadows Fall," and other favorites which have identified him over the ether lanes. Frank Prince, crooner, also is featured. Orchestral selections include "Coming Round the Mountain," "Beside the Fireside," "Was That the Human Thing To Do?", "Paradise," etc., punctuated with solo and ensemble vocalizing by members of the orchestra, one of the highlights being a German quartet composed of Paul Weigland, Leonard Cavash, Russ Morehuff and Eddie Ehlert. Bernie introduces an 11-year old lad "discovered" in St. Louis last week, who sings "Auf Wiedersehn, My Dear" in a pleasing voice. As a finale, Bernie steps into the pit to direct Charlie Stone's house orchestra in conjunction with his own, greatly swelling the volume and rhythm.

Parker, Babb and Lottioe
New York Academy

A flash act, carrying four extra people. The act features various kinds of dancing, different types of singing and a good idea behind it all. Unfortunately there is plenty room for improvement in the entire act, except for the singing of the feminine harmony trio. Their bit consisted of the singing of a few hill-billy songs, which warranted more applause than anything else in the act. An unannounced young lady, for her two appearances, first offered a good tap dance and then a novelty dance, for which she was dressed as a cat. Her acrobatic routine in this bit made up for the mediocrity of her singing, and drew good applause. The two or three dances offered by the principals lacked the finesse usually associated with this type dancer.—E. D.

Canzano and Josephine
Milwaukee Wisconsin

Gabriel Canzano puts the ringtail monkey Josephine through some snappy tricks. They toss a ball back and forth in true baseball fashion.

Cherry and June Preisser
(Booked as Sisters)
New York Palace

These two kids from N'Orleans are sure good. They dance, sing, gag and perform some surprising acrobatics. They are both very young, and it's their first appearance on the New York stage. I never saw so much pep in two people in all my life. One is a little blond and the other a shapely brunette, tall in comparison, who has a head of beautiful curly auburn hair. They wear practically nothing, but there is nothing suggestive about their act. It is clean as a whistle. Good anywhere.—F. de T. C.

Alice and Sonny La Mont and Co.
Dallas Palace

The chubby Sonny is a monologist, acrobat, dancer and a "wow" as a gagster with his parade of "gap props" as he crosses and recrosses the stage with his changing exhibits, his father questioning him to elicit the wisecracks. This entire act of father, mother, son and daughter is good, with father and Alice doing some neat tightwire work as well as dancing turns.

Williams and Cryor
New York Academy

A piano and singing act featuring two colored boys. The first part of their act is the usual singing of popular numbers by Cryor, with Williams accompanying him at the piano. Cryor has a good voice, but just about outdoes himself on the high notes. Williams offers a piano solo that makes the audience warm up to them and follows it with repartee between himself and Cryor that gets plenty laughs. For this bit, he takes on the accents of the "silly ass" type of Englishman and puts it over in fine style. Act runs 14 minutes.—E. D.

Gaston Palmer
Brooklyn Albee

Billed as "The French Humorist," Palmer chatters, both in English and in French, while he juggles balls, balances sticks, etc. Some of his tricks are difficult, but the most entertaining part of the act is his line of chatter.—E. D.

Cab Calloway with His Orchestra
New York Capitol

Cab does his monkey shines, directs dances and sings. To help out his jungle music he puts on ultra fashionable clothes—a white dress suit, for instance, and he sings all the Cotton Club stuff in his repertoire. He stands alone in his style and the audience likes it.—F. de T. C.

REVIEWS OF ACTS

Ruth Roland

Dallas Palace

Charming, petite, accomplished and beautiful, Miss Roland does not need her smiles of flickering celluloid experience to succeed as a stage attraction. She is versatile, and pleasingly effective in her songs, yodeling, dancing and patter.

Clifford Wayne and His Six Indians

New York Hippodrome

This is a strange but attractive act because of its unusualness. Six full-blooded American Indians (billed thus) do a lot of Indian stuff and also a goodly amount of stage negro business that was invented to amuse the whites. However, it is well done and pleased the audience.—F. de T. C.

Frank Morgan

New York Paramount

Frank, after a hard struggle to get a laugh, tells the audience that "Mother came home plastered and told me I was a ——." Some snickered and some sighed; a few laughed and a lot grunted. Not good American stuff.—F. de T. C.

Don Barclay

Detroit Michigan

If he was ever a musical comedy favorite, as his billing proclaimed, he must have been considerably better than he appeared in this role as the "Cisco Kid" in the stage show, "Westward, Hi! Ho!" He demonstrated great burlesque ability in his anatomical explorations of Marion Eddy.

Rosetta Duncan

New York Palace

Rosetta goes over big in her half of the act that she and her sister became famous in. She carries a laugh in her eccentric verbalities and winning grimaces. She has a way of entering the hearts of her audience, confidential-like. She is some psychologist.—F. de T. C.

Frank and Milt Britton

Cincinnati Albee

The Brittons and their gang, in their roughhouse musical act, smash violins to smithereens, hurl chairs into the orchestra pit, rip clothing off one another and tear down the backdrop.

Doc Baker

Brooklyn Albee

Doc Baker, famous quick-change artist, and his company of eight present "Flashes of 1932," in three scenes. First scene opens in Central Park, with Baker, dressed as bum, sitting on park bench. An apparition in the form of a young girl appears back of him on scrim, and tells him he can have another chance to go back on the stage. Doc walks off stage and appears nearly instantaneously in full afternoon dress and does a song and dance routine with six steppers. Charles and Helen Stone are then introduced by Doc and offer well-timed dance steps to heavy applause. The next scene, in front of a saloon the night prohibition went into effect, offered Doc a number of instances where his ability to change dress quickly was brought into play. Helen and Charles Stone are each given a chance to offer their dancing singly and each do very well. Helen does tap steps and Charles a difficult eccentric dance. The final scene is called the "Magic Screen," and behind it each member of the company makes quick changes of costume. The act is both novel and entertaining.—E. D.

PLAYLETS

Pola Negri

Brooklyn Albee

The exotic star of the screen presents her own playlet entitled "So This Is Love." It is a dramatic episode built around the histrionic ability of this tempestuous star. Walter Peitri effectively plays the part of the former lover and acts as a perfect foil for Miss Negri's acting. Besides acting extremely well the part of the discarded lover, Miss Negri incorporates into the skit the popular song, "Paradise," which she beautifully sings both at the opening and closing scene.—E. D.

Bert Lytell (5)

Cincinnati Albee

The stage and screen star, with a company of four, presents a dramatic sketch, "The Valiant," which, although devoid of comedy relief, is a welcome diversion in the maze of straight vaudeville turns. The sketch, revolving around the last moments of a condemned man about to be executed without revealing his identity, is tense and gripping throughout. Lytell in a curtain talk explained that the script was based on an actual occurrence at San Quentin prison. The sketch has lost none of its power since Lytell presented it at another Cincinnati house three years ago.

Edmund Lowe, Victor McLaglen and Fifi D'Orsay

New York Capitol

This trio do an act that would be amateurish were it not for the size of their names. The vehicle is unworthy of their importance in the entertainment world. It is just horse play and showed every evidence of lack of preparation. It ought to be rehearsed. Fifi D'Orsay shows up well under the handicap, which is plenty.—F. de T. C.

DANCERS

Patricia Bowman

New York Roxy

Patricia Bowman is a solo dancer and a very beautiful one, indeed. Her costume and the scene she danced in were becoming and artistic. She was subordinate to the general theme in which the Roxyettes overweighed the program. She danced with a big slowly moving hoop which seemed to hamper the freedom necessary to a dancer. This is a slow-moving act and would be out of place anywhere else in the country.—F. de T. C.

Lucille Page

Brooklyn Paramount

Miss Page, a comely young lady, first offered an acrobatic and contortion dance routine that was exceedingly well done, but which rated only fair with this audience. Her second appearance, later on in the show, was one of the same nature, but featuring a turnover split. This time she had no difficulty in getting a goodly amount of applause.—E. D.

Dorothea (2)

Detroit Fox

Dorothea, spectacular control dancer, is assisted by a male partner in a dance combining two-steps, twirls and kicks. In her control dance she shows remarkable endurance. Working around the stage on one foot, she slowly kicks the other with unfaltering grace.

Two Jays

Dallas Palace

The team presents a clever array of eccentric steps.

Bob, Andy and Tod

Milwaukee Wisconsin

They do some neat tap dancing, both singly and in turns. The boys are in full dress with silk toppers.

Red and Strugge

Detroit Fisher

These colored boys do an excellent sotto voce patter and dance pantomime.

De Haven and Nice

New York Roxy

These two dancers burlesqued a balloon dance given in the Roxy ballet and were a snappy addition to the show. They received the biggest hand of the entertainment, which as a whole seemed to be suffering from the blues—perhaps because Fred Waring was leaving. De Haven and Nice recently returned from Germany where they have been working for Ufa.—F. de T. C.

Viola Dobos

Detroit Fisher

Following a ballet number, Miss Dobos gyrates into a fast dance that ends in a split at the top speed of her spin. This spectacular feat draws spirited applause.

Dorothy Roberts

Dallas Palace

A classy dancer she is, with acrobatic antics and taps.

King Twins

Oakland Paramount

Limber-jointed girls, they offer some lively acrobatic stunts in which beauty and skill are intermingled.

Sound Film Equipment Part Of New College Music Hall

Sound motion picture projection apparatus is included in the equipment of the newly erected $600,000 music and dramatic arts building at the Louisiana State university at Baton Rouge.

In addition, the structure, which has an auditorium seating capacity of 578, contains a broadcast system controlling 36 microphones, two rehearsal rooms and various other appurtenances of the modern theatre.

Jackie Cooper on Tour

Jackie Cooper, M-G-M's juvenile star, is currently making a personal appearance tour. He has already appeared in St. Louis, Mo. He will return to the studio in three weeks.

Compose for Chevalier Film

Richard Rodgers and Lorenz Hart, New York composers, have completed nine musical numbers for Maurice Chevalier's latest for Paramount, "Love Me Tonight."

COMEDY

Ritz Bros. (3)

Brooklyn Paramount

This comedy trio is one of the most entertaining before the public. Their comedy songs and dances earn them great applause and are climaxed by their laughable impersonations of famous personages. Their opening bit is a comedy routine built around the days of Julius Caesar. They are dressed as gladiators, sing special lyrics and offer a few silly dances to fit in with the idea. They follow this with a number of good gags and a blackout that is good for plenty laughs. In this, one of the boys does the famous Dr. Jekyll and Mr. Hyde transformation, and another the impersonation of Frankenstein. Intermingled with their dancing in the next scene, one of them gives his impression of a number of screen stars doing the "Charleston." They close to great applause with a comedy dance done in unison. A good, clean act that's a show-stopper for any house.—E. D.

Benny Rubin

New York Loew's State

Benny Rubin must be sick or something. He's done better, but it would be hard for him to do worse. He talks and tries to sing, and dances a little—very little. As a master of ceremonies he is a great flag pole sitter.—F. de T. C.

Hal Sherman

Brooklyn Albee

Sherman uses Dorothy Ryan as a foil throughout his act, she doing the singing and straight for his gags. Hal is dressed in oversized summer attire and offers a number of laughable bits before going into his specialty of eccentric comedy dancing. This dance closes the act and should have been more prominently featured, for it drew the most applause.—E. D.

Joe Besser & Co. (3)

New York Academy

One of the most laughable comedy acts in the business went over great here and except for a little toning down in spots is great for any other house. The act opens in a Spanish setting in which a dramatic scene is enacted. Very serious until Besser, rotund comedian, bursts on the scene. From then until the curtain goes down there's one laugh after another. His comedy dress and odd mannerisms overshadow every attempt of the others to be dignified. Act did very well here.—E. D.

Russel Marconi & Gerry

New York Loew's State

This trio have a good act. A shrimp-sized man with a powdered face and an accordion gets the laughs when his trousers get emotional and go up his legs on the high notes. A blonde girl and male guitarist do a dance routine, and the act goes over well. Good anywhere.—F. de T. C.

Carl Shaw (3)

Cincinnati Albee

A hodgepodge of buffoonery, patter, songs and dances is aided and abetted by a man and girl, both unbilled. "Whose Little Whoosit" by Shaw and "Lovable," by the girl, are the highlights of the vocalizing.

Jack Pettet and Buddy Douglas

Cincinnati Albee

It's a round of wisecracks, hoofing and singing. Buddy, a lad apparently not yet out of his teens, displays most unusual talent in all three branches.

Milton Berle

Brooklyn Albee

This popular young comedian works throughout the show as master of ceremonies, introducing each act in an informal and laughable fashion. He offers some gags and stories that our forefathers chuckled over; nevertheless, this audience did laugh lustily at them. They had probably heard them, but the way this young fellow "sells" them is different. For his own spot on the bill, Berle offers some of his own humor and then sings a comedy song, made up of special lyrics and varied titles to popular songs.—E. D.

Frank Gabby

Detroit Fox

Frank steals the show with a well-balanced brand of comedy. Gabby's gab emanates from the gastric regions—he is a first-rate ventriloquist. A balcony character interrupts his acts and adds considerable to the performance despite the antiquity of the device.

Eddie Cole

Milwaukee Wisconsin

An artist with a comic chatter and a novelty. An old-fashioned Charlie Chaplin film is thrown on the screen and Eddie directs Charlie through the picture, with plenty of laughs from the audience.

ACROBATICS

Rath Brothers

Brooklyn Albee

These boys have a standard vaudeville and presentation act that has played in nearly every house in the country. Their display of acrobatics is done with the utmost of ease and we have yet to see them when they haven't received a great hand.—E. D.

Anderson and Allen

San Francisco Warfield

Strong men and acrobats, they present some difficult feats that win particularly through their newness.

Rector and Doreen

Dallas Palace

In this aerial strong-jaw act, daringly diverting and original, the lady goes through a prolonged suspended spinning routine.

DeLong Sisters (3)

Cincinnati Albee

Somersaults, handsprings and pyramiding all are done in rapid-fire succession by the trio.

Columbia System Features a Stage Program from England

Musical comedy and vaudeville, in the form which entertains the theatre going population of Great Britain, will be heard in the United States on Friday, May 20, by a special broadcast from London, to be transmitted in this country over a WABC-Columbia broadcasting network.

The program is one of a series of eight international exchange broadcasts arranged between Columbia and the British Broadcasting System. On June 3 Columbia will return the favor with a similar program from this country to England, to be called "Broadway."

OVERTURES

JOE RUSSO (New Orleans Orpheum) and his RKO'lians, assisted by Eddie Newcome, the singing usher, remembered Mother with a selection of numbers written about her and played in fine style. Opening was a flash on Al Jolson's celebrated "Mammy," followed by Jac Assunto's trombone solo of the mother song from "My Maryland." The trumpets and the trombone then stood in a baby spot for a trio of "Mother Machree," which went big both because of the playing and the effect of shadows which the spot created. Eddie Newcome, billed as the singing usher, sang "M-o-t-h-e-r," after which the entire orchestra played "My Mother's Eyes," closing with a return to "Mammy."

CHARLES E. STONE (Cincinnati Albee), ever alert for diversification in his programs, played "Die Shone Galathea," the first German overture to be given at this house. The symphonic arrangement of the score exerts a subtle appeal to those who have a flair for harmony, while those who are not musically inclined cannot help but enjoy this worth to the nth degree. In the ensemble numbers, as well as the individual passages, the overture clicks, as evidenced by the salvos of hearty applause which greeted the presentation at the first show.

HERSCHEL LEIB (Detroit Fox) believes in the occasional use of standard arrangements of standard composition. The effectiveness of such a presentation, stripped of all embellishment, can test the ability of an orchestra and conductor. The most ardent student of music could find little to criticize in Leib's rendition of Liszt's "Second Hungarian Rhapsody." Joseph Wohl handled the piano interlude in praiseworthy manner.

JULIUS SOKOLOVE (Baltimore Keith's) who has taken over the direction of the Rhythm Boys, at this playhouse, played as an overture selection from the stage musical, "Rose Marie," all members in the pit in an orange flood light. The spot was used on Sokolove when he soloed with violin in playing thematic part.

WALT ROESNER (San Francisco Fox) and the Fox Orchestra made Mothers' Day last a full week by offering an especially arranged overture made up of airs in which the mother motif prevailed. "Songs My Mother Taught Me," by Dvorak, was played on the organ, with orchestra accompaniment, and "Mighty Lak a Rose" was presented as a trumpet trio. Joaquin Garay, appearing after an absence of two weeks, sang "My Madonna," while a mother in soft lights formed a lovely picture on the stage.

ALEXANDER KEESE (Dallas Palace), has practically become permanent director for an indefinite engagement as his adeptly arranged programs continue to meet with great favor. The Modern Rhythm Band first indulged in "Here Comes the Missus" and then "When the Moon Comes Over the Mountain." With the baton wielder leading the whistling, the versatile orchestra displayed similar talent and made a hit of "The Whistler and His Dog" while a nicely sung solo part enhanced the beautiful strains of "The Perfect Song." The throbbing rhythm of "Dixiana" glided into "Goodnight, Sweetheart" with an oboe solo neatly done. The climax was reached in the expressive "Hallelujah" with an ensemble of nine of the orchestra as a vocal chorus. It was a diversified and very entertaining program of music which was added to greatly by an additional sequence of smoothly adapted musical numbers played from the stage for the stage show.

HELLO, EVERYBODY!

Instead of going out and hitting the little "pill" around for 18 holes, last Saturday, I stayed around the office and listened to the melodious strains of "How Dry I Am," etc., which were wafted up here to the fourteenth floor, on the gentle breezes around Columbus Circle. . . . Yes, I was a traitor to the cause and failed to march in the Honorable Jimmy Walker's "Beer" parade; nevertheless, I am for it and "hurrahed" as loudly as the next fellow. . . .

I understand that Blossom Seeley and Benny Fields (and under the direction of Danny Winkler), headline vaudeville performers, are presenting their own arrangements of popular songs—some of which they made famous—in a series of broadcasts over an NBC-WEAF network every Monday at 7:30 P. M.

There are three important reasons why the Remick song, "Whistle and Blow Your Blues Away," is a hit. . . .One is that it is a natural . . . the second is that when Joe Young and Carmen Lombardo wrote it they wanted to prove to the Maine professor that people that whistle are not crazy . . . and the third is that it is the kind of tune needed in these times. . . .

Ben Alley, co-featured weekly with Ann Leaf on the Charis Musical Revue, broadcasting over the Columbia network, is a handy man to have around when things go wrong. . . . His ingenuity served him in good stead during a recent stage engagement. . . . He left his dressing room, garbed in a bath robe, to answer a phone call. . . . When he returned, he found his door locked. . . . The janitor, the only person in possession of a key, was not to be found. . . . Ben finally "jimmied" the door open and dressed in double-quick time to get on stage at his proper cue. . . .

Herbie Kay, youthful MCA maestro, is now a member of the Sioux tribe of Indians. . . . Herbie was inducted into the tribe by Chief Little Bear and was given the Indian name of "Chaydah-Sappa," which means "Happy Music."

Sammy Lee, who is rehearsing for "Rio Rita," which opens at the Capitol soon, is seeking tall and slender showgirls who can sing. . . .

Julius Lenzberg has been appointed associate conductor to Dr. Hugo Riesenfeld at the Roxy. . . . Jacques Gasselin will be concertmaster and Cornelius van Cliet, solo 'cellist. . . . William Lockwood is the manager of the orchestra. . . .

Organist Appointed Manager

Henry B. Murtagh, veteran organist at Shea's Buffalo, has been named manager of Shea's Hippodrome in Buffalo. The house recently shifted to an all-film policy when vaudeville was moved to Shea's Century.

ORGAN SOLOS

EGON DOUGHERTY (New York Astoria Triboro) presented another of his popular song-fests that had the entire audience singing and put them in a jovial mood for the vaudeville that followed. Dougherty opened with the song "Oh What a Thrill," and offered for the second number a stunt different than is usual in his routine. For this spot, Egon had Mark Levant, conductor of the house orchestra, play a violin solo of the semi-classic number, "Sylvia," while he played a soft accompaniment on the organ. The hand given them was of the finest. The balance of the program consisted of the following singing numbers: "Whistle and Blow Your Troubles Away," "Call It Madness," "Where the Lilies of the Valley Grow," an old novelty song, "Pussy Willows Whisper," which incidentally earned an encore, and a final chorus of "By the Fireside."

JULIA DAWN (New Orleans Saenger) receives a splendid reception for her opening here, a reception which is the more surprising as her work is dignified and altogether different from the type of solo which prevailed in this house for two years. Miss Dawn is a brunette Valkyr with a pleasing personality and an unobtrusive manner. She uses the triumphal march from "Aida" to open, has some slides explain how happy she is, and so on, all to the tune of "Hello, Everybody." Her program really gets started with "Was That the Human Thing to Do?" followed by a novelty "Kitten on the Keys," and closing with "Kiss Me Goodnight," with Miss Dawn singing both verse and chorus. Her voice is a bit high, but fills the ample auditorium and, judging from her breathing and phrasing, she knows something about singing. The audience gave her a heavy hand.

HAL BECKETT (Brooklyn Fox), who shares his billing with the popular "singing usher," George Kaye, presented a pleasing organ solo, built around and entitled "Songs of the Night." Singing songs for the audience were "Dream Sweetheart," "Good Night Moon," "Blue of the Night," and a final chorus of "Starlight." George Kaye, who possesses a most pleasing voice, entertains the audience with a chorus of "At Dusk." Hackett, who has a nice personality, talks well and uses his smile to advantage. Good applause is given the boys.

ARSENE SIEGEL (Detroit Fisher) does a solo entitled "Singing the Blues Away," opening with "Dream Sweetheart" and "Dancing While Lights Are Low." Very successful was a novelty done by four groups, left, center, right and balcony, with "Was That the Human Thing to Do?" "My Mom" was timely, well received. It was played first without words and with a cornet solo. With this the audience threw in a voluntary humming.

JOE STOVES (New York Jamaica Valencia) presented a novelty organ solo entitled "Show Boat," which proved very entertaining. Opening with "Here Comes the Show Boat," (word slides superimposed on boat and river effect slide covering entire screen), Stoves in his natural southern drawl told the audience the story of the showboat and followed it up with the song, "I Love a Parade," which Charley Paul and his orchestra played. The audience were told that they were the showboat's singing ensemble and they did their part by singing the balance of the program which consisted of "Somebody Loves You," a special to "Human Thing to Do," "By the Sycamore Tree," a "humming" special and a special finale of "Roll On Mississippi." A very good reception was given Mr. Stoves.

WHAT DOES YOUR PUBLIC KNOW ABOUT RAW FILM?

NOTHING, perhaps. Yet, whether they're aware of it or not, people are profoundly influenced by the photographic quality which that film gives or does not give them on the screen. It may mean all the difference between a picture that goes its quiet, unprofitable way and one that becomes the talk of the town.

There's no need, these days, to run the risk of sacrificing photographic quality. Eastman Gray-backed Super-sensitive Negative, with its unmatched qualities and its never-failing uniformity, costs no more than other films, yet it helps substantially to head the picture for success. Wise the cameraman who uses it...lucky the exhibitor who runs prints made from it!

. . . SPEAKING OF MOTION PICTURES

Speaking of motion pictures these days means speaking of Warner Bros.! Not since the early days of Vitaphone has one company so dominated the thought and comment of the trade. The astounding quality pace maintained consistently by Warner Bros. for the past five months is recorded in the ledgers of thousands of theatres. Today it has won the GRATITUDE of a great industry to whom Warner Bros.' vigorous and unfaltering showman spirit has meant . . . Salvation!

NEUTRALITY AND PICTURES

According to the outgivings of Mr. Lynn Farnol for Mr. Samuel Goldwyn, a bit of difficulty is being had getting a suitable vehicle for Mr. Ronald Colman, attended the while with not a little literary fussing over two pieces of Russian material. First there was "Karamazov," commented upon as "vivid dramatic material for the theatre" but rejected finally because it is not a story of the modern Russia, the Russia of the Soviet. And then there was "Way of the Lancers," which Mr. Goldwyn's staff endeavored to prepare for the talking screen, now also abandoned—this, by contrast, because it is just too infernally modern in that "it is brilliant, empassioned and fervent" but "it takes sides, frankly, with the Whites" as against the Reds.

"We can't take sides in our film stories," says Mr. Goldwyn. ". . . It would have been easy to neutralize it. But then Boleslavsky's fine story would have been a different story. We couldn't do the tale with his fire and his conviction and his memory of the suffering he witnessed. . . ."

There is no occasion to take issue with Mr. Goldwyn's business judgment, and he is to be entirely commended in a decision to abandon a story rather than to manhandle it by a process of "neutralization." The motion picture has suffered not a little in status through the familiar Hollywood process of "dumbing it up for the hicks."

But just at the moment, one may be made unhappy by the apparent necessity for Mr. Goldwyn's decision against material which he found so full of merit. It is again an evidence of that constant endeavor of the makers of motion pictures to make them with a weighty intent and endeavor to please all of the people all of the time. No other art form, no matter how much intermeshed with commerce, finds itself so handicapped.

As the author of these paragraphs solemnly forecast in 1920, the time seems to be approaching when the picture producer will have to cast his villains entirely among the Esquimaux and the Thibetan tribes without a diplomatic representative to make official protest to Hollywood and the Hays office.

If Mr. Goldwyn is correct, and for the grand average he may be, then the motion picture is tethered to the immediate contemporary world of Now, and to neutrality on every big issue which burns in the breast of man. If adequately applied, such a policy can prevent the motion picture from ever amounting to much. Militant novels are published, militant pictures are painted, sardonic music is composed, and there are caricatures carved in stone. Neither the publishing business, nor the arts of painting, music and sculpture are thereby indicted.

The motion picture seems ever so professionally to view with alarum that it can not set itself at the task of trying once in a while to make a profit by importantly pleasing or interesting an audience of something less than world extent.

We have set forth in these pages, often enough, that "the customer is always right," but that has not been said on a presumption that the customer is everybody all of the time. The motion picture, with its adventures and misadventures in "sponsored pictures" and its assorted worriments about censorship, taxation, fire regulations and what not, has evolved into a self-conscious and timid medium. It never takes a chance on contradicting anything or anybody—except general principles.

THE SMUT VENDORS

Mr. "Observer," who writes with such poignancy on page one of our able contemporary, HOLLYWOOD HERALD, is considerably annoyed about "the studio personages responsible for a new vogue in publicity stills," remarking that: "The gag is to photograph female stars exhibiting their garters," etc. The etc. is ours. Really the vogue is not new, but current demand from publications more concerned with circulation for 10 cent magazines than with the welfare of the industry is giving encouragement to persons who might know better. Placed in the proper hands, the improper pictures, and some undercover salacious circulars now extant, can do much to fix this industry, proper and plenty. The code of this industry must ever be the code of the consumer, the American public, which has not yet approved the fence writing pornography of bad boys, of any age. It is not yet smart to be smutty, in public.

A BANKING VIEWPOINT

Mr. EDWARD R. TINKER, chairman of the board of Fox Film Corporation, in his address before the Motion Picture Club this week has told the industry, for the first time, in clear crisp words just what the motion picture industry looks like from where the banker sits. In sum Mr. Tinker finds the motion picture just coming to adult status among industries in a period of business depression, and suffering what he deems the typical symptoms of all developing new industries. He admits that there are troubles but finds "the pessimism of today is strangely familiar to one who encountered like problems in the crises of 1902, 1907, 1914 and 1921." This coming of age and the passing of the industry from its status as a group of private enterprises into an aggregation of public companies entails two new lines of responsibility, in Mr. Tinker's opinion—a responsibility to the investor public and a product responsibility to the morals, mores and wellbeing of the whole people.

Mr. TOM KEENE, star of RKO westerns, came across the country to hear about the market for pictures at first hand from bookers, exchangemen and exhibitors. When a youngster from the horse operas will go to that much trouble about the product it might convey a suggestion to those impressarios of Hollywood who contact the United States by spending two weeks on Broadway and New York's night clubs.

CLEAN POSTERS

CHRISTIAN SCIENCE MONITOR, commenting upon a plea in "Sight and Sound," New British quarterly, that the standard of posters in England and America be improved, warns that "a sensational poster may easily give a very inaccurate and injurious impression," explaining as follows:

> The new British quarterly, Sight and Sound, very opportunely draws attention to the need for improving the quality and type of posters commonly used in England and America to advertise cinema programs. Objectionable posters may do more harm than objectionable films. In the first place, they are far more numerous; in the second, no one is compelled to see an objectionable film unless he chooses to do so, but, short of a willingness to remain indoors for twenty-four hours a day, it is impossible to escape the lurid pictures with which film exhibitors advertise their wares.
> These posters frequently do the films they advertise an injustice, keeping away many who would otherwise go to see them. Time and again they give quite false impressions of the sort of entertainment to be found inside the cinema. When a famous continental talkie was to be shown in England some weeks ago the British Board of Film Censors cut out certain scenes. But it was these very scenes that were exhibited on enormous posters. . . .
> In this case, the advertised scenes actually were not in the English version of the film. But even where this is not so, a sensational poster may easily give a very inaccurate and injurious impression. A poster of a single scene is very like a passage torn from its context. It may even suggest that a fine and uplifting work is harmful and deleterious in tendency. The films are not as a rule by any means as bad as their advertisers make out. Let us by all means raise the standard of the films; but let us raise the standard of the posters as well.

NASTY

"Nasty filth in the form of 'shorts'" is objected to in the following vigorous language by the HERALD at MANCHESTER in CONNECTICUT:

> . . . Here is a department of Filmdom that definitely does need cleaning up, and which easily could be. . . . Feature pictures, on the whole, are probably as good as the age and as good as the people who look at them, and possibly as decent as the theatre has ever been in any age or any country. But we could do very nicely without the introduction before average audiences of nasty filth in the form of "shorts." . . .

BAMBOOZLING

The "censorship boys" are "playing for higher stakes than motion pictures" was the somewhat cryptic statement of A. de Bernardi, Jr., motion picture critic of the NEWS at DENVER in COLORADO in addressing the local clubwomen and Federal Council of Churches. Thus:

> Several bills in congress are aimed in the general direction of censorship. The best way to defeat them is to let your representatives and senators know—by letter—that you are unalterably opposed to any form of censorship. Don't wait until the law is on the books and then try to get it repealed—kill it before it becomes law! Don't let anyone bamboozle you into believing it's the movies the censorship boys are after, for that's only a smoke screen. They are playing for much higher stakes than motion pictures!

MIRROR

That the motion picture "is the most extensive mirror of American life today" is the conviction of MR. CYRIL KAY-SCOTT, director of the Art Museum at DENVER, who, writing in the NEWS of that city, says:

> The moving picture is the most extensive mirror of American life today. I have often wondered why our art critics have so neglected it. . . .
> The moving picture has become, whether we like it or not, the art which is seen and heard by more Americans than all the other arts combined—many times over. Sentiment, public opinion, morals, manners, the mass reactions of a race, are here echoed and recorded. In much the manner that architecture, music and the graphic arts expressed the soul of the renaissance the movies express the America of our time. . . .
> The place from which to begin the task of improving the movies artistically is in the mind of the public. Sneering and scolding at the men who have immense sums invested in the industry is about as effective as carping at the stockholders of General Motors. The public will have what it wants.
> I am not saying that the movies are all silly, or even esthetically bad. Many of them in part, and some in entirety, are astonishingly good. Even in the ethically dubious ones, indignation over which I will leave to our clergy, there are moments revealing a unity of sight, sound and rhythm for which any artist, however highbrow, can feel nothing but unalloyed gratitude. . . .

THE AGE

It's the age, not the cinema, that is to be blamed for "never saying anything of importance," in the opinion of the motion picture critic of the PUBLIC LEDGER in PHILADELPHIA, thus:

> The continual cry against cinema is: "It never says anything of importance." That is perfectly true; but then, what is saying anything of importance these days?
> It is a fault of this age that we write, paint, sing and talk about things that don't matter. And if anybody asks our artistic creators why they do it, they look down paternally and smile: "Ah, that's impressionism." . . .
> I fail to see where cinema has chased its tail any more furiously than have the more dignified arts. In the general scheme of affairs I feel the screen, bad as it is most of the time, is getting just as much (or as little) really important work done as are its companion efforts: Drama and Opera. . . .

INDUSTRY NOW PUBLIC INVESTMENT, NOT A SPECULATION, SAYS TINKER

Parallels Auto and Oil Trades "When Principal Units Became Public Companies, Not Private Concern of Pioneers"

Says Corporate Machinery Must Be Overhauled and Policy Revised When Public Are Invited To Be Partners and Creditors

The motion picture industry is at its final stage of development, having become an important public investment instead of a speculative enterprise, Edward R. Tinker, chairman of the board of Fox Film Corporation, told the weekly forum of the Motion Picture Club of New York. Lowell Thomas, lecturer, who was also a guest speaker, related theatrical experiences and described the type of news items which bring the greatest response when broadcast to radio audiences.

Mr. Tinker likened the present status of the industry to that attained not so long ago by the automobile and oil industries "when their principal units became public companies and ceased to be the private concern of pioneers." In so doing, Tinker paid tribute to the Motion Picture Club's forums and the opportunities they provide for performing an industry service.

"These forums," he said, "are interpreting the industry to itself, and that is important. Even more important, this forum contributes in a major degree to the development of mutual faith and understanding among those who make motion pictures, those who pay money to see them, and those who provide the capital and credit on which the industry is based."

Parallel Evolution

Pointing out a similarity in the evolution of this industry to other "young" industries, Tinker intimated that it was not difficult for bankers to diagnose and prescribe for the growing industry's ailments.

"It is within the recollection of each of us," he said, "that the automobile and the oil industries passed through this period. They, like other industries, in their infancy were closely concentrated in the hands of a few great leaders whose contribution as pioneers to the industrial development of this country is undeniable. Theirs was a spirit of adventure. Their business endeavors were conducted, and perhaps properly, in that spirit.

"And so the public at the commencement came to look upon their particular business as a speculative, rather than a sound undertaking. Policies and practices were developed which may have been legal and ethical on the part of a private business, but were neither legal nor ethical once the public were invited to become partners and creditors."

"When that transpires," Tinker said, "corporate machinery must be overhauled; public policy must be revised; ethical concepts must be reconstructed and credits must be established; stockholders must be appeased and the investor, rather than the speculator, must be won over.

AUDIENCE REACTIONS

News items as innocent appearing as one concerning a 150-year old woman in Bulgaria, who attributed her longevity to the fact that she had always slept with a potato in her bed, frequently bring the most pronounced public reaction when broadcast over the radio, Lowell Thomas, "Voice of the Literary Digest" in the realm of radio and occasional picture talker, told a New York Motion Picture Club audience this week.

"On the morning after I had read that news dispatch over the radio," Thomas said, "I was swamped with mail from all parts of the country, commenting on the item. There was a wide variety of response to it, but the letter I enjoyed most was written by an 85-year old woman living in Connecticut. She wrote: 'I may not be 150, but I've lived quite a while myself and I can certainly say that a potato in my bed would never satisfy me. It's not hot enough. What I always use is a hot water bottle, and I'm in pretty good health today'."

"I was busy explaining my admiration and affection for the Irish for weeks after," Thomas said. "It was one of my greatest audience responses, and the message that seemed to summarize them all was written me by a woman in Pittsburgh: 'I spit in your eye, you dirty Orangeman'."

---

"We have seen the automobile and the oil industries go through that period and emerge with new corporate strength, enhanced credit and public understanding. Our business is now facing this trial just as theirs did. The duration of the period of stress depends somewhat upon general business conditions, but more particularly upon the quality of leadership and the degree of cooperation attained within all elements of the industry itself."

Non-Interference Policy

Referring to the not infrequently heard references to "a banking invasion of the motion picture industry," Mr. Tinker said that the policy of non-interference which has pursued since entering the Fox organization is very likely the policy which would be followed by any experienced banker.

"I have but to remind you," he said, "that I have never attempted to make pictures and have no intention of so doing."

He pointed out that, with the exception of himself and "a financial man installed as vice-president on the Pacific Coast," the Fox corporation continued intact as before, or else derived its manpower from within the industry itself.

"Banking influence in the company," Tinker said, "has been and will be largely confined to the guidance of the corporation as concerns its financial and corporate activities and the development of a favorable public opinion as regards the company itself, and, as far as possible, the industry as a whole."

Mr. Tinker reminded his audience that, however necessary it may be for the industry to meet its responsibilities to stockholders, it has also a responsibility to the public which does not permit it to be "too provincial" in its viewpoints, or "too ambitious for the box office dollar."

"The management of this industry," he said, "has an ever increasing responsibility not only to its stockholders, but to the public as well. Our task is not alone measured by the fact that we have a two-billion-dollar investment in our business in this country which must be put on a profitable basis. A much greater responsibility is the judgment we use in dealing with that great power for good or evil, necessarily inherent in the selection of material for the screen.

"We must ever remember that millions of people attend motion picture theatres every week. The leaders of an industry wielding a power of this magnitude can not afford to be too provincial in their viewpoints, nor too ambitious for the box office dollar. Theirs must be a policy of broad vision and foresight if this industry is to hold its rightful position in world affairs and avoid the pitfalls of over regulation and suppression which has been the fate of other industries, where greed for the immediate dollar has obscured the broader viewpoint."

"I believe," Mr. Tinker declared, "the industry is preparing to meet these responsibilities with wisdom and courage. Admittedly, these are trying times for all business executives—yet the pessimism of today is strangely familiar to one who has encountered like problems in the crises of 1902, 1907, 1914 and 1921."

"The American people are mercurial," he said. "They respond rapidly to the law of action and reaction. The pendulum has

5-5-5 CONTRACT AS ALTERNATIVE IS CONSIDERED BY DISTRIBUTORS

Study of Proposal by 9 of 11 Large Companies Is Won by Lightman After Conferring With Their Attorneys

Distributing Concern Would Have Available Its Own Contract and Standard Licensing Agreement for the Exhibitor

A majority of large distributors have under consideration a plan to make available to exhibitors this season a draft of the 5-5-5 standard licensing agreement as an alternative of the individual contract of each company, for exhibitors who desire it.

Consideration for the plan was won by M. A. Lightman, president of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America, who, charging that the legal departments of large distributors were responsible for obstructing the adoption of the uniform contract, met with attorneys of all but two large companies last week and urged them to consider his proposal for placing the contract in work, and possibly arrive at some form of arbitrating disputes with exhibitors.

There is no indication at this time whether any or all of the larger distributors will act on Lightman's recommendation, but nine of 11 large companies are currently giving consideration to his plan. Lightman's intervention in behalf of the uniform contract was undertaken in his official capacity as president of the MPTOA which, at its annual convention in March of this year, urged "the immediate adoption of the proposed standard license agreement by all distributors for the optional use of every exhibitor who prefers that form of contract."

It is the intention of Lightman and his association to secure adoption of the 5-5-5 contract immediately as an initial step which can be followed by negotiations with exhibitors pointing toward changes and correction for improving the instrument.

The MPTOA convention also urged the initiation of negotiations for the improvement of the standard contract, but Lightman, in currently advocating immediate action on the optional contract plan, is proceeding in the belief that the current selling season will be too far advanced to obtain contract reforms this year if exhibitors wait upon the outcome of negotiations for the improvement of the standard licensing agreement, and that that agreement, even in its present form, represents an improvement over individual company contracts in many respects.

First Interested Universal

In his campaign to obtain action on the 5-5-5 contract, Lightman first visited Universal, as that company was the first to complete its new-season sales meeting and was about to launch its sales campaign on new product. The favorable reaction to Lightman's plea for an alternative contract led P. D. Cochrane, R. H. Cochrane, George Schlaifer and Willard Stewart McKay, all Universal executives, to urge Lightman to make a smilar presentation of the contract case to the legal departments of each large distributor. Lightman refused to visit each company separately, but he did agree to present the situation to all company attorneys in a body at the New York offices of the MPPDA. At a session held last week, and attended by representatives of the legal departments of all but two large distributors, Lightman repeated his accusation that company attorneys were responsible for the failure of distributors to place the 5-5-5 contract in work. He urged them "to cease bickering" and to take some immediate action on the uniform agreement.

WHEN DOCTORS DISAGREE

WINFIELD SHEEHAN

vice-president of the Fox Film Corporation, is quoted in The Daily Film Renter of London as saying:

Pictures of the future must convey a bright and happy note; they must be made for the family audience and leave the seamy, sordid side of life alone.

DARRYL ZANUCK

production executive of Warner Brothers, is quoted in the New York Sun as saying:

Every one seems to want to cry. People like to go to a theatre and see others suffer, then say, "Why, that other fellow's troubles are worse than mine." They feel more cheerful later.

Further conferences were held subsequently, and it was stated that as a result, certain of the attorneys and some distribution executives are inclined to further discuss the 5-5-5 contract. Unofficial legal opinion holds that the availability of an optional contract avoids all the illegal aspects of a uniform contract. Under the proposed plan, the distributor would have available either his own contract or the standard licensing agreement, and the exhibitor could select his preference, it being a question for the exhibitor to decide, not the distributor.

Arbitration Proposed

At the group meeting of attorneys, Lightman presented a proposal for arbitration of disputes between exhibitor and distributor. According to his plan, a clause would be inserted in contractual forms allowing the exhibitor the right to select either legal channels for settling or else arbitrate. The exhibitor would not be asked to exercise his right, nor make a decision of selection until after the distributor had claimed an offense had been committed. It is understood that the exhibitor would not be obligated to agree in advance to adopt either one or the other means of settlement. The arbitrating would be done along the lines of the "universal arbitration system." It cannot be a nationwide industry form because this was declared illegal a few years ago in a federal decision handed by Judge Thacher.

Some of the provisions of the standard licensing agreement not contained in individual company contracts now in work, and said to be regarded as being particularly advantageous to exhibitors, follow:

Product automatically becomes available to subsequent-run houses 90 days after date of availability for first-runs, except in cases of long run theatres and provided the first-run has 30 days time to play the picture if desired.

The exhibitor may play a film out of release order provided he is up to schedule on play dates and further provided that all skipped releases be dated or paid for within 30 days of that date.

The exhibitor is allowed to eliminate five per cent of the pictures called for by his contract provided he buys 20 or more on an average of $250 or less, including score charge.

Provisions for arbitration.

Exhibitors are allowed to cut sound newsreels to fit local needs.

Percentage checkers are required to be regular employees of a distributor or an accountant.

MPTA Is Seeking Service and Trailer Charge Reductions

President Van Hyning of the MPTA of Kansas and Missouri named a committee to seek reduction in trailer charges and he also asked Electrical Research Products for a statement on service charge reductions, at the opening of the two-day annual convention at Kansas City on Wednesday.

Howard E. Jameyson, Wichita, Kan., district manager for Fox theatres, clashed at an early session with independents when he objected to a special night conference of exhibitors at the convention, which had been called by Van Hyning, and which was planned without the inclusion of circuit representation. Jameyson declared that circuits and independents have common problems and he cited efforts of Fox theatre officials in the Kansas City territory to make Sunday shows possible for everybody in the state.

The meeting is expected to resolve itself into an airing of the grievances of independent exhibitors against the circuits. A new schedule of zoning and protection is said to be one of the demands of the independents. The Fox accessories order demanding return of material will also be discussed.

The ORIGIN and DEVELOPMENT of STARS

by MARTIN QUIGLEY

PERSONALITIES have been, are and seem destined to continue always, as the cornerstone of the amusement industry structure.

It would seem, therefore, that a thorough understanding of the origin and development of personalities, or stars, would be sought after and held as an essential element of knowledge for this industry.

This, however, is not the case. Instead of exact knowledge the usual attitude seems to be one in which persons are content to look upon stars as some miracle of good fortune; an accidental happening attributable to no certain cause, or as a personification of lofty genius.

The fact is that stars are created by:

I. GOOD PICTURES

II. GOOD PARTS

III. BECOMING KNOWN to the public through appearance in good pictures and good parts.

We have deliberately refrained from listing the personal qualifications of acting ability, face, figure, voice and the other attributes of personality because, while the world is full of distinguished exemplars of these gifts, it is not full of stars; hence, the possession of the attributes of personality is not the determining factor—and actually is not even a principal factor—in the creation of stars.

There is nothing whatsoever in the make-up of established stars which is not duplicated times without number in the rest of humanity. There is no combination of the attributes of personality enjoyed by any or all of the stars which is not repeated countlessly elsewhere.

Hence, the stars or outstanding personalities in pictures are not possessors of some extraordinary genius, the mere possession of which has insured for them, from the cradle, a royal road to stardom.

We do not say that any person might become a star; obviously not. But in the case of any person who has become a star, this eventually has not been due to any exclusive possession of certain attributes of personality; thousands of other persons, placed in identical circumstances while seeking to appeal to the public's favor, would have gone the same way, to the same end.

We do not attempt to reduce the question to a scientific formula because, after all, the vagaries of human nature—the public's as well as the star's—are such that there will necessarily be the occasional exception or there will be the obscure case which does not stand immediately susceptible to explanation. But the rule is plain:

Assuming possession of the attributes of personality, in a reasonable quantity and quality, stars are made by good pictures and good parts. Every leading personality of the screen has become such as the result of a good picture and a good part, or—as applies in most cases—a succession of good pictures and good parts. Practically every star has been made in pictures and parts which may readily be called to mind. Either they have been made in pictures or else they came to pictures after having been made leading personalities in good stage plays and good parts in them.

Through good pictures and good parts, gradually, with the idealizations achieved on the screen, they have penetrated the public's consciousness and have eventually become to the public a personified medley of the parts and pictures in which they have played.

There is plenty of star material everywhere; what is needed is the good picture, a succession of good pictures, to sublimate the raw material which abounds by the thousands into the stellar substance.

It readily follows, then, that the correct search for stars does not lead away from the gates of the studios and around the world but right into the studios themselves—into the pages of the writer's manuscript, into the brain of the director, into the showmanship of the producer and onto the studio floor where the player who is at work, if given a good part in what proves to be a good picture, is on the road to stardom.

It is interesting to recall that virtually all of the stars have eventually come to be recognized as stars only after this process of a succession of good pictures in which they have had good parts. Of course, the competency of the player and the spirit in which he or she enters upon the work is important. But such competency and such spirit is not rare; there is a vast supply of it.

It is also a striking fact that through the years one company and then another seems to occupy the limelight as a star-maker. The real explanation of this phenomenon which lies beneath the surface indication is that the company which is making the stars is the company which is making the outstanding pictures. Other companies go on year after year producing indifferent pictures. The complaint is raised that such a company is "creating no stars"; of course it is creating no stars because while it has at hand or easily available vast quantities of the material from which stars are made, the stellar personalities are not realized simply and solely because the pictures in which their players are appearing are not sufficiently distinguished to make the necessary appeal to the public's interest, for themselves and for their players.

The elements which comprise a star consist of a combination of memories and recollections in the public mind of the various pictures and parts in which the star has appeared. Hence the difficulty in any established star successfully changing to radically different characterization than that to which the public has become accustomed.

Stars after once having been made are unmade for either or both of two reasons:

The interested and favorable attitude of the public, originally created through appearances in good pictures and good parts, is dissipated through appearances in poor pictures and poor parts, or else the personality becomes out-moded by being supplanted by another personality whose pictures and parts enable him to become emphasized over his predecessor.

Publicity, either that gained through appearances upon the screen or through the use of printers' ink or in other recognized ways, is an important influence in hastening the development of the process which is being carried on through good pictures and good parts. But publicity alone, unless it is backed up through the sublimation of the personality in good pictures, cannot be genuinely or lastingly effective.

On account of the hastening influence of publicity in bringing to fruition the process already at work in the case of the player appearing in good parts in good pictures, the theatre performs an important function in the development of stars. In the first place, it is upon the screen that the player is presented to the audience. The manner and spirit of this presentation has important bearing upon the public's reaction. Similarly the various means of publicity within reach of the theatre materially hasten or retard, depending upon the skill and diligence of the theatreman, the progress of the personality into the consciousness of the public.

Stars are made by pictures—a fact which when thoroughly realized and appreciated throughout the industry should have a generally salutary effect.

ECONOMIES HALVE FRENCH OUTPUT AND AMERICAN PICTURES BENEFIT

Public Delighted at Prospect of Again Enjoying Films from U. S. as Dubbing Improves; New Quota in Effect July 1

By PAUL GORDEAUX, Paris

American product is benefiting by a dilemma in which the producing companies of France are finding themselves. Readjustment to the general economic situation has forced the French producers to cut in half their output for the coming year. And French exhibitors are turning to foreign-made pictures to fill their programs, a solution with which the French public is quite in sympathy, and much to the satisfaction of the exhibitor himself. As a result, the French producing companies have appealed to their government for protection with quota restrictions, and a new quota law becomes effective July 1.

The dubbing process has reached a stage of development sufficiently satisfactory to make a good French show of a foreign picture and the result is that, week after week, dubbed pictures are invading the French screen. Most of them have been well received by French audiences, delighted at the prospect of again enjoying American pictures and viewing the work of Hollywood's world-famed stars, of whom they have not had a glimpse since the good old days of the silent celluloid.

A Turning Point

Thus the French motion picture industry is reaching a turning point of its history. In the early days of talkers, the lure of novelty alone was powerful enough to attract crowds to the box-office and pack the pictures houses. Little it mattered whether the pictures shown were good or bad. That at last the screen could talk was the one and only feature which interested the French audiences.

Little by little, however, the novelty wore away, and the public has now learned to beware of eulogistic publicity. Before lining up at the box-office, most of the people endeavor to get some kind of information about the picture shown. Thus the screen is subjected to the same law which has always been ruling the legitimate stage: huge receipts, long runs for the outstanding shows, failure and financial disaster for the bad ones. After all, this is only logical, but it means a lot of trouble for the French exhibitors. The good old days when any cheap "lemon" turned out to be a financial success are passed and theatre owners have a different problem.

Realize Past Wastefulness

At the same time, film production is experiencing a most acute crisis. French producers now realize that they have been spending millions recklessly and that, owing to the general depression, they cannot raise additional funds. They therefore are obliged to carry out a restriction policy. This has necessarily affected the number of films produced in the past few months, and French companies have been obliged to halve their picture output for the new season.

Exhibitors are perfectly satisfied with the resultant arrangement that is bringing back the American production. They get good pictures on an average and at a renting rate which is not prohibitive.

So far, so good. But what is going to become of the French producers, if dubbed foreign pictures prove satisfactory to the public? Who will care about original versions, if dubbed pictures are better—and cheaper? The consequence would be a hopeless situation for the local producers.

Once more the French companies have turned to the government for help, requesting the powers-that-be to protect them against foreign competition by establishing a quota regulation. The Chambre Syndicale de la Cinematographie has already laid out a plan providing for the admission of 200 foreign pictures, either in dubbed or original versions, every year. It also stipulates that 75 per cent of the dubbed pictures should be post-synchronized in the French studios.

Quota Effective July 1

Two hundred pictures every year. But the next question is: Will this figure be large enough to supply the French picture houses with enough material to live up to their expectations? I doubt it very much, and even so, there is another question which arises immediately: In what ratio will these 200 pictures be divided among the various foreign industries; how many German, how many American films will be allowed to enter the country each year? No one knows, thus far.

The scheme outlined by the Chambre Syndicale must now obtain the approval of the Conseil Superiour du Cinema. This official body is very likely to agree in spite of the efforts of the French actors' equity, which is openly against the dubbing of foreign-made pictures. The new quota law will come into effect on July the 1st. Whether it will bring a new fillip to the film industry remains to be seen. There's just one good thing about this new quota regulation. From now on, American firms will not have to live in this atmosphere of uncertainty that has been paralyzing their action for months.

Receivers Report Year Loss On Skouras St. Louis Houses

Two St. Louis theatres, the Ambassador and Missouri, lost $104,000 and $120,000 respectively last year, according to a report filed in the St. Louis circuit court by Jesse W. Barrett and Walter H. Nohl, receivers for Skouras Brothers Enterprises, Inc., controlled by Warner.

The receivers estimated that the houses cannot be operated at a profit under present economic conditions, unless operating costs are substantially cut. Assets of the company are listed at $6,449,225.

Industry Is Public Investment: Tinker

swing far downward to the bottom of the arc. This country has always recovered from such crises and will do so again. Our abundant resources are still with us. The spirit of our people is not broken—their confidence will return.

"The picture industry has been no exception to the general rule except that, being younger and more vigorous, it offered at the start more resistance to the wave of business recession and felt its adversities later than other lines of endeavor. This is indicated by the fact that the highest grosses of the year were returned in November and December of 1929 when the stock market panic was at its worst.

"Its readjustment period should be shorter than in other lines of industry, but perhaps more drastic. A young growing industry, full of enthusiasm and the suffering from mistakes due to enthusiasm, as a rule has more corrections to apply than its more fully developed and experienced neighbors."

Both Sides Filing Answers In Youngclaus "Test Case"

Attorney Paul F. Good, counsel for Youngclaus, Nebraska exhibitor involved in the test case on protection in which various national distributors are defendants, has filed his answer, with defense counsel expected to follow immediately. The answers are expected to be argued early next month at Lincoln.

No final decision is anticipated before the latter part of June or early in July.

Langdon Deal with Christies Cancels Tieup with Woolsey

The Christies have engaged Harry Langdon to star in six two-reel comedies, giving him a free hand on stories and supporting players. The arrangement cancels a proposed deal which would place Langdon in a team with Woolsey, the comedian, with both starring in features for Columbia.

Warner Omits Dividend

Warner Brothers Pictures, Inc., has omitted the regular quarterly dividend of 96¼ cents a share on the preferred stock due at this time, by decision of the board of directors.

Zeidman-Gilda Gray Deal Off

Bennie Zeidman's proposed deal to produce independently two features starring Gilda Gray will have to wait until Miss Gray completes a presentation tour lasting a year. She will head her own unit.

PROPOSES SMALL TAX UPON EVERY BUSINESS

Hamrick Suggests Levy as Low as One Per Cent on All Income Producing Occupations, Wholesale or Retail

A plan for a non-discriminatory emergency tax measure designed to aid the Government in balancing the national budget without placing undue obligations on any industry or enterprise has been conceived by John Hamrick, operator of the Blue Mouse Music Box Theatre at Seattle, Portland and Tacoma. The plan has been communicated to every senator and congressman in Washington, and to the President and the secretary of the treasury. Hamrick's revenue plan calls for a very nominal tax, probably one per cent, levied against all income-producing occupations, without exception, whether commercial enterprises or professional practices.

Calls All Lines Equally Affected

A copy of Hamrick's plan as it was presented to Federal lawmakers, follows:

"With full confidence that our lawmakers are earnestly and honestly seeking ways and means to pass an emergency tax law that will do the greatest good with the least possible harm to the greatest number of people, and speedily liberate the government from a tremendous burden, I offer the following idea that came to me as a revelation:

"Every line of business, whether wholesale or retail, including doctors, lawyers, merchants of every kind and description, including theatres, pay the government a very small tax, say one or two per cent on their gross business monthly without having to name any particular article, the tax to be allowed as an expense to every individual business, and the tax should be as small a burden as possible to raise sufficient funds to balance the budget.

"Today every line of business is terribly affected, one equally as much as the other, and every business is making it very hard on the lawmakers because they are each one endeavoring to shove the tax over on the other fellow. What we need most right now above all else is a pure unselfish tax law absolutely equal to every line of business that should be made on its gross business monthly and paid to the revenue department monthly. No one can complain if it is equal to all and there should be no excuse in this particular emergency to exempt any line of business.

Sees Lower Income Tax

"This plan will gross the government so much quick revenue that income taxes could be greatly reduced instead of increased and thus encourage capital to step out and try to do business which would employ millions of people and have a tendency to more speedily end the depression.

"Just as important as during war times, newspapers could carry the message that every line of business must file with the revenue department in their district a statement of their gross monthly business for the past year to be treated strictly confidential and never to be made public, which would give the department some idea whereon to base future calculations.

"I most earnestly beg of you to seriously consider this plan, as it will honestly and constructively lift the mists and let in some real sunshine."

Fox Midwest and Independents End Double Bill Fight

After weeks of negotiations between the Independent Theatre Owners, Inc., and Fox Midwest Theatres, both have agreed to drastic regulation of double billing, effective immediately in Kansas City. One double bill a week will be allowed and none on Sunday. Houses charging 10 cents admission will be allowed to dual-feature twice a week.

This provision was stipulated in the "Code of Ethics" which was adopted by Fox and independent theatres last February, but went into the discard three weeks later when Fox houses went on a double-bill policy seven days a week. Independents vehemently protested scrapping the regulations, at the same time resorting to twin features as a competitive measure. Recently Fox Midwest evinced a willingness to negotiate.

Patrons of Kansas City suburban theatres have expressed a majority preference in favor of a balanced program consisting of one feature and selected short subjects and have voted down double bills in a preference poll just completed by Skouras-operated Fox Midwest theatres.

A total of 20,000 addressed business reply postcards were given out by ushers over a period of a week at nine neighborhood houses that have been double billing consistently more than two months. Fox Midwest paid the postage. Approximately 60 per cent of those replying voted for the single feature and varied short subjects.

Disregarding the fact that it was completely surrounded by double feature houses, the Avalon, Chicago Warner house, recently reverted to a single feature policy. The change was effected by general manager Joseph Bernhard and James E. Coston, local zone manager, because of the scarcity of good product and the high cost of dual programs.

The public's response to the Avalon's first single feature program is claimed to have exceeded all expectations. The total paid attendance for the week increased about 30 per cent over the average for six weeks preceding the new policy. Patrons' comments were unanimously favorable.

Walsh Opens Fight To Lift Exemption Back to 45 Cents

The first gun in the United States Senate's admission tax fight was fired on Tuesday by Senator Walsh of Massachusetts in the form of a proposal that the Senate finance committee exemption of 10 cents be raised to the House figure of 45 cents as part of his plan to substitute for a number of excise taxes a general manufacturers' sales tax covering all commodities except necessities and agricultural implements.

Walsh's proposal for a manufacturers' tax will receive considerable backing from Senate members who may be against such a levy, but are more opposed to the various individual taxes which have been written into the bill. He has made a bid for the support of important groups by providing for the elimination of the automobile taxes, the lubricating oil tax, etc., and will receive support from Shortbridge of California and a number of other members in the proposal to increase the admission tax exemption.

With a great deal of time already lost in the consideration of the import taxes, the Senate is facing a big problem in the disposition of all pending legislation before June 11 in order to adjourn before the national political conventions, the House having served notice that it will not adjourn or recess until the tax bill, the general economy program and the departmental appropriation bills are disposed of.

While the theatre owners, beverage manufacturers and tobacco dealers in Massachusetts have won the first step in the battle being waged against imposition of special taxes by the state on these industries, Governor Joseph B. Ely announced this week that the fight had only just commenced and that he would carry the battle to the floor of the state legislature. The committee on taxation on Friday rejected the proposal made by Governor Ely for a tax on these industries, terming such a levy a "nuisance tax."

Grainger Given Scroll From Sales Force at Fox Session

James R. Grainger, vice-president of Fox, was presented with a scroll, pledging the loyalty of the sales force, at the final session of the company sales convention last Thursday, at the home office. A silver replica of the scroll will be given to Grainger.

The company was awarded the MPPDA silver fire prevention trophy, given annually for the best kept film exchange in the United States, at the final session. The Cleveland office won the award. Will H. Hays presented the trophy to Sidney R. Kent, Fox president.

Harry M. Warner, president of Warner Brothers, on Saturday testified in Washington before the banking and currency committee of the Senate, explaining his transactions in Warner Brothers stock. He was interrogated by Senator Couzens of Michigan and committee counsel, William A. Gray.

Dr. Wingate Denies Suit Threat Caused 'Scarface' Passing

The passing of "Scarface," with eliminations, by the New York State Board of Censorship is a "knockout victory" over the board, in the opinion of Lincoln Quarberg, of the Howard Hughes organization in Hollywood, who, in current publicity material sent to the trade press, says that the censors' action was taken because the board sought to "avoid a lawsuit" which Hughes had threatened.

"That is not our viewpoint," said Dr. James Wingate, chief censor, in answering Quarberg's statement, which Dr. Wingate said "looks very much to me like box office publicity."

"Opposition to 'Scarface,'" continued Quarberg, "was claimed by" Hughes to have been "promoted by dishonest politicians because the picture depicted 'unpleasant political truths'." Hughes "accused the censors of New York and other states of ulterior and political motives in attempting to suppress the film," Quarberg's publicity release stated.

Dr. Wingate answered this by reiterating, "that is not our viewpoint." "As a matter of fact," he continued, "I urged the Hughes organization to take an appeal and we have in our files the official application of the appeal on which they listed eliminations we had suggested and which they had made on 'Scarface.'"

MPTOA Completes Plan for Contol By Independents

The election last week of a new executive committee for the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America completed the transfer of the organization's executive direction to independent exhibitors, in accordance with plans formulated at the recent national convention at Washington, D. C.

Elected were Jack Miller, Chicago; J. B. Fishman, New Haven; M. E. Comerford, Scranton; O. C. Lamb, Atlanta; David Barrist, Philadelphia; E. Van Hyning, Iola, Kan.; M. A. Lightman, president of the association, and Frank C. Walker, general counsel, are ex-officio members of the committee.

The executive committee was chosen by the board of directors along regional lines, to carry on the work of the organization between board meetings, and report to the directors at their sessions. Fred H. Wehrenberg of St. Louis is chairman of the board.

Seeks to Break Injunction

Federal Judge John C. Pollock, in Kansas City, has under advisement a motion by Dickinson Theatres seeking dissolution of a state injunction with reference to Sunday operation, or removal of the case to federal court. Defense claims the suit is a civil action, the state contending it is criminal.

HUGHES and CENSORSHIP

Mr. Lincoln Quarberg, in charge of publicity for Mr. Howard Hughes, has assumed to work himself into a considerable frenzy over the menace of censorship and the necessity for a vigorous fight by the industry against the menace. Meanwhile he has been gaining much notice for the Hughes production, "Scarface."

Mr. Quarberg's efforts, publicity-wise, are being ably conducted; he is doing a good job. As far, however, as his noisy agitation against censorship is concerned the results are absolutely nil. The whole matter, in this respect, becomes upon close examination more than a little ridiculous. He is presenting Mr. Hughes as a valiant and unselfish crusader whose sensibilities have been shocked by the autocratic, domineering and unreasonable attitude of the censor boards.

Having inspected several pictures which have carried Mr. Hughes' name on their main titles, an assertion that Mr. Hughes has any sensibilities would have to be classified under the index of, "Important if true." We recall with unpleasant vividness the unwholesome mess which Mr. Hughes presented as the story in his great air spectacle, "Hell's Angels." Various of the lesser production efforts under the Hughes banner have also given much notice to just those things which have brought about censorship and which, so long as they are being done, will keep censorship in one form or another alive.

We can recall no one now active in the industry who could with less grace than Mr. Hughes himself become excited about the question of censorship, for the reason that just the things which Mr. Hughes seems to delight most in doing are just the things which brought about censorship in the first place and which have defeated every serious effort thus far made to wipe out censorship.

There is so much in this situation which Mr. Hughes does not know—and which he is either incapable of knowing or does not want to know—that it would be quite useless to argue with him. He apparently sees no reason whatsoever why persons will lean upon political censorship—as bad as it is—in an effort to keep filth off the screen where no other method seems to be effective. Mr. Hughes' record as a producer makes his current excitement over censorship appear more than a little absurd.

Mr. Quarberg, in behalf of Mr. Hughes, has been primarily concerned with the safe escape of "Scarface" from the attention of the censors. That "Scarface" should have encountered censorship difficulties ought not to have surprised Mr. Hughes—and probably did not. Obviously, he set out in this picture to top everything that had been done in the making of gang pictures and outside of one exceedingly nasty sequence in the original version, which has since been materially altered, he succeeded rather well.

As long as there is censorship a picture like "Scarface" will encounter censorship difficulties. This is unfortunate because there is no conclusive proof that a gangster picture is capable of doing any harm to the public, young or old. There is, of course, a real danger in making a hero out of a gangster character. But this need, and should, not be done.

But so long as there are pictures of the kind to which Mr. Hughes has largely devoted his interest—there will be censorship.

Mr. Hughes can contribute very much more importantly to the fight against censorship by directing his efforts toward cleaning up his pictures rather than toward cleaning up the censor boards.—M. Q.

Laemmle Operation Success; To Leave Hospital Shortly

Carl Laemmle will be able to leave the Johns Hopkins Hospital in Baltimore within about two weeks, it is announced, following a successful operation on Monday, performed by Dr. H. H. Young.

Carl Laemmle, Jr., was with his father during the operation and reported him as in good spirits. A bulletin announcing the excellent condition of the patient was received at the home office on Monday afternoon.

Former Omaha Exhibitors Get $2,000 in Anti-Trust Action

Newton & Leddy, former Omaha exhibitors, operating the Garden theatre, have been awarded $2,000 in Omaha federal court in their anti-trust action against nine distributors and the Omaha Film Board. They sued for $105,000 charging a conspiracy prevented them from obtaining films.

The verdict was given for the loss of physical property, including fixtures of the Garden theatre, and light. The court denied damage for alleged loss of profit. Unless there is an appeal, this terminates the case, which has been in litigation for five years.

Theatre Official Freed

The Missouri supreme court has issued a preliminary writ of habeas corpus freeing T. J. Martin of New York, treasurer of Skouras Brothers Enterprises, Inc., St. Louis, in connection with a contempt of court citation issued by a circuit judge. The high court writ is returnable this week.

SUBSTITUTION TO BE ARBITRATED UNDER NEW UNIVERSAL CONTRACT

Cites Simplifying of Availability and Plan to Modify Protection to Aid Competitor When Theatre Changes Prices

Board and Umpire to Determine Equitable Solution of Each Case; Laemmle Also Expresses Hope for Dispute Arbitration

The much bedevilled issue of "substitutions" is met with an arbitration clause in a new form of exhibition contract announced by Carl Laemmle, president of Universal, this week.

Further, in the course of a discussion of the new contract Mr. Laemmle, at Baltimore, where he underwent an operation at Johns Hopkins Hospital last week, declared a hope for a plan by which any and all disputes with exhibitors could be arbitrated.

"The new contract not only has many original features," said Mr. Laemmle, "but it is absolutely plain and unequivocal in its language, and best of all, it is the most equitable contract that any company has ever used. It combines all of the experience that we have acquired throughout the years, and eliminates many of the difficulties that have cropped up in former contracts. We have knocked all of the doubts and misunderstandings out of the availability clause; we have set up an easily understood and easily worked clause dealing with substitutions; and we have put the entire thing in much less complicated language and in a form which can easily be read by every exhibitor.

"I am proud of this contract. I am proud of the plain language in which it is stated. I am proud of its fairness and readability. I am proud of the brains which dictated it and drew it up. I am grateful to Jack Schlaifer, our sales manager, and to Willard McKay, our general counsel, and I know that exhibitors will be grateful to them for a contract which is so easily understood and so equitable in every way.

"One of the most important provisions in the new contract is that dealing with substitutions. The nature of this business is such that substitutions are absolutely bound to occur and are as necessary for the exhibitor's sake as they are for that of the producer. The object of the new clause, unique in motion picture history, is to determine equitably when a substitution can be made by the producer, and when an exhibitor can justifiably refuse a substitution which is offered to him under the contract. This question, which has been so vexatious over a period of years, has been solved by the establishment of a board of arbitration and an umpire. The clause (sixth) governing substitutions is as follows:

" 'The exhibitor agrees that provided any such substituted motion picture is equal in box office possibilities to the motion picture for which it is substituted, the exhibitor will accept such substituted motion picture in the place of the motion picture originally designated, with like force and effect as if the substituted picture had been originally designated in the schedule. If the exhibitor desires to raise any question as to the relative box office possibilities of the original motion picture and the substituted motion picture, the exhibitor may do so within five (5) days after the receipt of the notice of substitution, which shall be sent to the exhibitor in writing prior to or concurrently with the mailing of the notice of availability. At the time of mailing such notice of substitution Universal shall have available a print of the substituted motion picture for screening at the exchange from which the exhibitor is served. If the exhibitor contends that the substituted motion picture is not equal in box-office possibilities to the original motion picture, the exhibitor shall, within such five day period, so notify Universal in writing and at the same time shall desgnate an arbitrator, stating his name and address, failing which the exhibitor shall be deemed to have accepted the substitution. Within three days after the receipt of such notice from the exhibitor, Universal shall appoint an arbitrator and notify the exhibitor and the exhibitor's arbitrator of such appointment. The arbitration shall proceed within five (5) days after the appointment of Universal's arbitrator and shall be held in the city in which is located Universal's exchange from which the exhibitor is served.

HIGHLIGHTS OF NEW UNIVERSAL CONTRACT

A board of arbitration and an umpire will "determine equitably when a SUBSTITUTION can be made by the producer, and when an exhibitor can justifiably refuse a substitution which is offered to him under the contract."

Of the new AVAILABILITY clause Carl Laemmle says: "I'll guarantee that anyone with common, horse sense can read it without wrinkling his brow too deeply and get the full sense of it at one reading."

If an exhibitor, after having obtained PROTECTION against a competitive house, changes his admission prices so that he is charging less than the subsequent run, "the protection may be modified so as to do the right thing by the competitive exhibitor."

As to the period of ACCEPTANCE of application, "the exhibitor is bound by the terms of the agreement for ten days plus twice the time which it would take for mail to travel between that city and the home office, and the distributor agrees not to solicit any competitive exhibitor until the application has been accepted or rejected."

" 'If the two arbitrators are unable to arrive at a decision they shall appoint an umpire. In the event of their inability to agree upon an umpire, an umpire shall be appointed by the president of the Chamber of Commerce or person holding similar position in such city and the decision of the umpire shall be final and binding on each of the parties hereto, on the question of the relative box-office possibilities of the two motion pictures.

" 'If within thirty (30) days after the receipt from Universal of the notice of substitution, the exhibitor shall send to Universal a notice in writing that the exhibitor desires to exhibit the motion picture originally designated in the schedule when, as and if released by Universal, the exhibitor shall be entitled and obligated to exhibit the said motion picture upon the same terms as are set forth in the schedule, if such other motion picture shall be released by Universal within two (2) years from the date of notice of substitution.'

"Another thing which will delight every exhibitor is our job of simplifying the availability clause (clause three). The old clause was a terror. It had to be read and re-read several times before it made sense. I'll guarantee that anyone with common, horse sense, can read our new availability clause without wrinkling his brow too deeply and get the full sense of it at one reading.

" 'Universal shall mail to the exhibitor at least fifteen (15) days' notice in writing of the date upon which each motion picture will be available for exhibition by the exhibitor (which date is hereinafter referred to as "the available date"). Within fourteen (14) days after the mailing of such notice the exhibitor shall select an exhibition date or dates within a thirty day period commencing with such available date, and shall give written notice to Universal of such date or dates so selected. If Universal shall have a print of such motion picture available for exhibition by the exhibitor on such date or dates, Universal shall confirm such date or dates to the Exhibitor and they shall thereupon become the exhibition date or dates of the said motion picture. If Universal shall not have available print of such motion picture for exhibition by the exhibitor upon such date or dates, it shall immediately so notify the exhibitor and the exhibitor shall within five days thereafter select new exhibition dates and notify Universal in writing, such new dates to be not later than twenty-one days from the date or dates originally selected by the exhibitor. Universal shall thereupon notify the exhibitor whether or not it has a print available for exhibition by the exhibitor on such new date or dates and this procedure shall be continued until the exhibitor shall have selected a date upon which Universal shall have a print of the said motion picture available for exhibition by the exhibitor.

" 'If the exhibitor shall fail to select an exhibition date or dates and notify Universal thereof in writing within fourteen (14) days after the day of mailing of the notice of availability, or if, after having been notified by Universal that there is no print of said motion picture available for exhibition by the exhibitor upon the date or dates theretofore selected by the exhibitor, the exhibitor shall fail to select a new exhibition date or dates within five (5) days after receipt of such notice, Universal may designate the exhibition date or dates of such photoplay, following the available date, and in the second instance within the twenty-one (21) days following the exhibition dates originally selected by the exhibitor.

" 'Except as to the first run in the territory served by the exchange mailing the notice of availability no notice of availability shall be mailed until there shall be at least one print of the motion picture referred to in the exchange.'

"In dealing with protection, we have endeavored to remedy the situation which frequently arose during the past year where an exhibitor, after having obtained protection

STABILITY and SECURITY

● The first concern of this corporation in the year 1932-1933, will be for the quality of the pictures it produces. For more than 20 years it has been a consistent producer of seat-selling pictures. We expect it to continue that record with credit to ourselves and with profit to our customers.

In recent months, personnel engaged in production and management has been materially strengthened, giving added security to more than 9,300 customers who look each year to the Fox Film Corporation for their dependable source of revenue.

For the coming season Fox Film Corporation will produce and deliver to exhibitors productions of high entertainment quality and strong box office appeal.

Movietone City today is animated by an enthusiastic creative spirit maintaining and improving the quality of its product. New elements of showmanship have been introduced. Administration has been so adjusted that the creative ability of the whole organization may contribute to the technical perfection and the entertainment quality of our output. Such an organization and such a policy tend to secure your investment and to protect your profits.

Prosperity depends upon the stability and security of the exhibitors who are our customers. We recognize our responsibility to you. We meet it herewith and greet all showmen with our Greater New Fox productions. We offer them with confidence and with pride.

E. R. TINKER, Chairman of the Board of Directors

IMPORTANT
to SHOWMEN

● Every thinking exhibitor will realize that it is impossible, particularly with trade conditions as they are today, to choose intelligently and to announce in advance a complete list of the titles, stories, and casts that will constitute this company's product for the coming year. The public taste changes, world events make new subjects timely, new plays, new books, and original stories develop which offer great box office possibilities. Occasionally stories which promise much fail to develop under treatment. Frequent changes must be made if showmanship standards are to be maintained.

Our interest is the same as yours. We operate many theatres. It is to our interest as exhibitors as well as to the interest of our exhibitor customers, that we be sure our product is new and timely and that it makes the most of the showmanship opportunities and ideas of the moment. For us to say at this time that we have bought and are prepared to cast and produce a full and exact list of the pictures we will make during the coming year, would be dishonest and would serve notice on the trade that we are in no position to purchase and produce the best of what becomes available during that year.

With those thoughts in mind we are announcing sincerely and as definitely as is humanly possible, a production schedule of approximately two-thirds of next year's output. This list constitutes a well balanced selection of strong stories. It leaves us opportunity to purchase the best stories that develop during the year and to take advantage of showmanship opportunities as they arise. It is our belief that such a policy frankly stated is the best guarantee for box office prosperity for ourselves and our customers.

I further believe that pictures must be made down to earth to meet the average mind and to appeal to the average audience. Highly sophisticated pictures are fine for a limited class but deadly for the masses. We are prepared to get back to first principles and make pictures from simple, human stories of universal appeal.

SRKent President

SETTING the PACE

● The coming season will be one wherein the resources of the entire industry should be concentrated on the effort to materially increase motion picture theatre attendance and to secure such an increase, once it has been effected. Realizing that this result can be obtained only through the presentation of a variety of quality entertainments moulding the best in stories, casts, arts and craftsmanship, this corporation proudly submits its 1932-33 product announcement to exhibitors.

This we do with the knowledge that these productions will set the pace in box office earnings.

In this announcement we outline facts and data pertaining to attractions dedicated to a quality of entertainment patterned to attain a quantity attendance consistently over a 52 week-to-week period.

We are aware that the responsibility of producer-distributor to its exhibitors this coming season is greater than ever.

With this knowledge we accept this responsibility and supplement our acceptance with the sincere pledge that this corporation will leave no effort untried in the delivery to its exhibitors of a product that will merit and command maximum profit.

HOUSE RETURNS COPYRIGHT MEASURE TO COMMITTEE; SIROVICH CRITICIZED

Record Vote Is Unnecessary as House Strikes Out Enacting Clause; Legislation Unlikely Unless Vestal Bill Is Used

Facing a bitter attack led by Representative Fritz Lanham of Texas, ranking Democratic member of his own patents committee, Representative Sirovich of New York on Tuesday was forced to stand by while the House of Representatives, without even a record vote, struck out the enacting clause of the copyright measure and recommitted the bill to the committee.

Unless the committee agrees to Lanham's suggestion that the Vestal copyright bill be brought in as a substitute, with amendments to meet objections which have been voiced to that measure, copyright legislation is dead for this session.

Deny Author Is Protected

Taking practically all of the time allotted proponents of the measure for debate, Sirovich outlined the history of copyright legislation and expatriated upon the work done by his committee. He was immediately subjected to a bitter onslaught by Representative Lanham and Sol Bloom of New York, leading the opposition, who asserted that the bill does not protect the author, who, it was said, gets about two per cent of the collections of the American Society of Composers, Authors and Publishers. The charges imposed by that organization for the use of copyright material were severely scored, indicating that members of the House did not believe users were getting a square deal.

It was explained by Sirovich that representatives of the society had been called to Washington with a view to straightening out the charges against their taxes and had admitted that in some instances they overcharged, agreeing to attempt to rearrange their tax scales.

Provision for recovery from innocent infringers was attacked by Representative Busby of Mississippi, who declared he did not understand how it could be left to the courts to determine the amount which such violators should pay.

The committee was censured for having failed to give any consideration to the Vestal bill, on which, it was pointed out, the author had spent a number of years and which he had succeeded in having the House pass last session. All this work was discarded, Lanham charged, and instead of using this or some other measure as a basis for its consideration, the committee held lengthy hearings without any measure before it at which objections could be directed.

Following conclusion of the general debate, as the bill was being read for amendment, Bloom offered a motion to strike out the enacting clause, which was adopted, and the House then approved a motion by Representative O'Connor of New York to recommit the measure.

The measure was brought up under a special rule granted last week by the House rules committee on a new draft of the bill—the sixth—following its third hearing on Sirovich's application for special treatment, when he and Representatives Rich of Pennsylvania and Dies of Texas assured the rules committee that the measure had finally been straightened out and that the various conflicting interests had at last been appeased.

Composers' Society Head Calls Imposing Music Tax at Studios Unjust to Exhibitors; Myers Challenges Mills' Statement

Enactment of new copyright legislation incorporating the music tax amendment would increase to exhibitors the cost of reproducing music rather than eliminate that cost, according to E. C. Mills of the American Society of Composers, Authors and Publishers.

The collection of the music tax at the studio, as provided for in the new amendment which was reported out of committee favorably last week, will be passed on by the producer to the exhibitor with additional costs, so that, in the end, the exhibitor would be paying more for the right to perform copyrighted music than he now does on the present per seat basis, according to Mills.

"It is perfectly stupid of exhibitor leaders to say that exhibitors would not have to pay a music tax if the proposed legislation is enacted," Mr. Mills said. "Not only will the exhibitor have to pay, but he will be obliged to pay more than ever. The present tax of ten cents per seat per year, which has remained the same since 1914 despite the ever-increasing catalogue of the American Society, assesses a 1,000 seat theatre only about 30 cents per day. The exhibitor knows what this tax is for and exactly how much it should be.

Cites Score Charge Costs

"Now," continued Mills, "Allied proposes an amendment which would license producers to perform, as well as record, copyrighted music. Thus, by paying the comparatively modest music tax the producer becomes the performing licensee. Recalling how producers pyramided the costs of music recording licenses under the guise of score charges so that exhibitors now pay substantially more than the cost to a producer of a synchronizing license, it will be interesting to observe, in the event this legislation is enacted, whether the present seat taxes are very substantially increased.

"I consider that Allied has done a poor service indeed for exhibitors in sponsoring the music tax amendment, and I am satisfied that if it is enacted the future will demonstrate that it has actually been a 'disservice,' for it is certainly worse than no service at all."

Myers Urges Passage

Mills' comments followed the circulation last week of a message from Abram F. Myers, general counsel of Allied, to district heads of the organization, reporting on the progress of the copyright legislation. Myers' message read:

"House patents committee unanimously reported out House Bill 12094 containing Allied amendments intact. Now let us get this passed without amendment on the floor. Since new number may prove confusing, better follow up endorsement to all congressmen.—Abram F. Myers."

Reproductions of this message were relayed to Allied members by divisional officers. In some localities, explanatory messages such as the one following, authored by H. A. Cole, head of Allied Theatre Owners of Texas, were appended:

"This refers to the copyright bill and tells you that our national leader, Commissioner Myers, with your cooperation, has been able to get into this bill, and approved by the committee, the two amendments we have been fighting for! One of these will KILL the MUSIC TAX which for years you have had to pay to the Society of Composers, Authors and Publishers! and the other will keep the producer-distributors from charging heavy penalties for small violations of the copyright law. For years you have been kicking about paying the Music Tax. Now for the FIRST TIME there is a bill before Congress—approved unanimously by the committee proposing it—which will free you from this burden.

"Recommended Action: Write or wire your Congressman today, asking his support of this bill, giving its number—12094—and especially write Hon. Fritz Lanham and Hon. Martin Dies, thanking them for their cooperation in getting this bill Right.—H. A. C."

The amendment which would reduce penalties for copyright infringement, referred to in Cole's annotation, limits the recovery of distributors, in cases of "innocent infringement," to provable damage only.

Commenting on this amendment, Jack H. Levin, general manager of the Copyright Protection Bureau, said: "The amendment is an open invitation to exhibitors to infringe.

A similar objection was raised by Gabriel Hess, director of the Copyright Protection Bureau, at the hearings on the bill before the House patents committee several weeks ago, at which Abram Myers was present.

Myers Challenges Mills On Music Tax Statement

Myers, commenting on the remarks of Mills concerning the music tax, said:

"The threats made by Mr. Mills were made before the patents committee by representatives of the American Society and the producers. If Mills thinks he can get as much or more for the limited amount of copyrighted music actually recorded on pictures as he does from the universal seat tax authorizing the theatres to use the society's entire repertoire without limit he has another guess coming. If the new arrangement will enable the society to charge higher royalties, why is Mills fighting it so desperately? He has never been a philanthropist heretofore. The matter is academic for the time being as the bill was defeated in the House yesterday on the ground it deprives authors of common law rights."

THE NEWEST PICTURES

Garbo's Final Picture for MGM Attracts Most Interest, Comedy Predominates in Other Offerings

By LEO MEEHAN

The biggest interest in Hollywood over new pictures this week was the final Garbo production under her MGM contract, "As You Desire Me." It portrays her in a highly romantic and colorful role, opposite handsome Melvyn Douglas, and, unlike "Grand Hotel," is practically all-Garbo. Her work is magnificent. Von Stroheim is an intriguing villain, and it's great stuff for the Garbo fans. Fitzmaurice directed from a fine script by Gene Markey.

Comedy predominated in the remainder of the week's new offerings. These included "The Dark Horse" and "Jewel Robbery" from the shops of the Warner Freres and "Society Girl" from Fox.

"The Dark Horse" anticipates an increasing interest in politics with the coming of party conventions and a presidential campaign. Laugh-getter Guy Kibbee appears as "hick" compromise candidate for governor, with Warren William, Frank McHugh and Bette Davis contributing excellent support. The preview audience did plenty of howling at the comic situations.

"Jewel Robbery," based upon the New York play, is very high, and quite sophisticated, comedy, featuring William Powell and Kay Francis. It is, as DeCasseres reported, a Lunt-Fontanne type of thing, which does not always "jell" in celluloid. Warners have given it an elaborate mounting, the performances and direction are uniformly good. It is no family picture.

"Society Girl" is the sort of stuff Sidney Kent seemed to mean when he talked about Fox making pictures for Des Moines and Dubuque, rather than catering to Broadway. Featuring three splendid performances by James Dunn, Spencer Tracy and Peggy Shannon, it is the story of an ambitious prize fighter who nearly loses the championship because of a love affair with a very rich society girl. Lots of fun, action and Cinderella-like romance.

Another from Warners during the week was "Week-end Marriage," featuring Loretta Young and Norman Foster. It features a familiar problem, the young wife trying to hold her job at the office after marrying, with resultant complications when the young husband becomes dissatisfied, wants her to quit and keep house. It is very well done, with a strong cast.

Outstanding among the productions from the independents during the week was "The Phantom Express," a thriller produced by Franklin-Stoner, a new and promising concern. Based on railroad life, featuring J. Farrell Macdonald as an engineer, it is replete with action and thrills. It was written and directed by Emory Johnson, remembered for a series of melodramas for FBO.

Eschmann Joins "U"; McCarthy In Schlanger's Post

L. J. Schlaifer, general sales manager of Universal, made his first major appointment since he took charge of the sales force of the Laemmle organization when he named Edward Eschmann, who began his duties as personal representative of Schlaifer on Monday.

By selection of Frank J. A. McCarthy as eastern sales manager in place of Ted Schlanger, resigned, Schlaifer this week completed his sales organization. McCarthy advances to his new position from the management of Universal's exchange in Boston. McCarthy's promotion was accompanied by several more promotions from the ranks, including Sig. Wittman and Sydney Singerman. Wittman is now assistant to the eastern sales manager and Singerman is assistant to the western sales manager, E. T. Gomersall, formerly division manager of the middle west. Both Wittman and Singerman have been with Universal for years. Harry Milstein is Universal's short subject sales manager. The district managers are William Richardson, southern district; W. J. Heineman, western; H. D. Graham, southwestern, and Dave Miller, central.

Stuart Returns to Vitaphone

Stewart Stuart will be at his old post of casting director when the Vitaphone studio in Brooklyn reopens on June 6.

ASIDES & INTERLUDES

By JAMES CUNNINGHAM

"IN keeping with the spirit of economy, production and profit of 'Sam Katz Week'," which will be observed at all Publix theatres, the corporation has induced the firms which manufacture its printing and engraving to donate the costs of a book containing some 130-odd pages of campaign ideas and exploitation stunts to be utilized during the Katz business drive which begins on June 24. In a message sent out this week to managers, executives of the circuit explained that "the usual advertising budget will prevail" during the testimonial to Katz and that "low-cost campaigns are to be consummated by every manager, so that the profits obtained will be an achievement secured by the actual hard work and effort of every manager."

Operators are further told to keep the campaign within the organization. At no time is it to be advertised to the public. "Do not send any stories to the newspapers using Mr. Katz' name or mentioning this particular week," the announcement says, and "Do not place anything upon the front of your theatre indicating same," nor "use any copy in daily ads to publicize this special week." The activities are purely "a gesture of loyalty to Mr. Katz," it is explained.

> "Spiro Skouras, the Warner exec., has given all his west coast mgrs. 6 wks. to get rid of their sun-tan. . . ."

Most everyone in the picture business knows that Mr. Skouras' first name is S-p-y-r-o-s, and that he resigned as an executive of Warner Brothers in February, 1931—one year and three months ago.

Nick Powers of the Elks theatre in Middletown, Pa., became suspicious of an act put on by an itinerant "hypnotist" as an added attraction to his picture show. He wondered whether the hypnotic genius really did put a "spell" on the girl while both appeared in a nearby store window for exploitation purposes, so Nick kept an eye on her all one evening. Everything went well until the girl turned slightly during the supposed trance and winked at a friend in the sidewalk group that was watching the performance. Checking further, Nick discovered that she is a waitress in a nearby coffee-pot and had been hired for the stunt for $15. The "hypnotist" and his entire "company" were both fired on the spot.

Loew theatre managers who ask the home office to approve of a debate on prohibition as an exploitation stunt on the company's "Wet Parade" will receive a stern refusal. It seems that the recent Walter Huston-Aimee McPherson debate on the coast proved a boomerang and that part of Hollywood which is heedful of the industry's good name is concerned about the possible unfavorable effect of future debates.

500 Japanese in Projection Classes

Nearly 500 Japanese men have responded to efforts in their country to improve sound picture projection, by entering special classes being conducted in Tokyo and Osaka. The lecture course has about 300 members in Osaka, and about 180 in Tokyo, according to a dispatch to Motion Picture Herald from the International Film News Service in Tokyo.

It is stated that the domestic film industry in Japan now feels itself capable of supplying a grade of talking picture product suitable for regular commercial consumption, but doubts that the country has an adequate number of projectionists of the skill required by the audible film. Among those conducting the courses are K. Kobayashi of Western Electric; K. Nitta and N. Kaeriyama, leaders in talking picture production and experimentation; T. Kamouchi, chief projectionist, the Imperial theatre; and K. Ito, electrical consultant.

MORE LEADERS JOIN DISCUSSION OF LICHTMAN DISTRIBUTION PLAN

The revised plan of distribution proposed two weeks ago by Al Lichtman, general sales manager of United Artists, at the Motion Picture Club in New York, continues to occupy a central position in discussions revolving about distributing and exhibiting problems of the industry. Some sixty owners and leaders in exhibitor movements, representing many hundreds of theatres, last week launched a discussion of the proposition which reached country-wide importance. In substance, the majority of independents indicated they were much against Lichtman's plan. Their reactions were followed this week by a general condemnation from Abram F. Myers, chairman of the board of Allied States Association. Other leaders joined the discussion during the week and the Kansas-Missouri MPTA decided to bring the matter before members at the annual convention which opened at Topeka on Wednesday.

Lichtman's plan is pointed to as a means of taking care of rentals, protection and other phases of operation by splitting the country's theatres into A and B groups, further classifying all product as of either A or B quality and then making available A pictures only to A theatres and B pictures to houses so designated. It also calls for consolidating distribution plants in one system with a single exchange center in each center to handle physical distribution.

Additional comment, this week, follows:

RUNS COUNTER TO TRENDS

ABRAM F. MYERS, Chairman of the Board and General Counsel of Allied States Association.

Whatever the outcome may be Mr. Al Lichtman deserves thanks for supplying a topic which will provoke much discussion and some thought. A critical analysis of the plan covers the entire range of practice and tendency in the business. Practical objections and physical difficulties I will leave to the experienced theatre operators who will join in the debate. Legal obstacles to the joint endeavors contemplated by the plan I shall lay aside—possibly for future use. For present purposes I shall assume that minds capable of conceiving such a program are adequate to settle the details incident to it.

What disturbs me is the tendency of the plan to run counter to the economic trend; to raise admissions when the trend is toward lower prices; to revive and extend the policy of concentration when the trend is toward decentralization; to withhold motion picture entertainment from the masses when the need is for a more widespread interest in the movies.

The plan might afford temporary relief for a few producers confident of their ability to make a high percentage of Grade A pictures. It undoubtedly would help, temporarily, a limited number of theatres that can qualify as grade A. Without pausing to speculate as to the fate of the remaining producers and theatres, representing a heavy investment and deserving of some consideration, let us consider the effect of the plan on the future of the industry and on the public.

An outstanding weakness of the plan is that it assumes that every patron of a low admission theatre is a potential patron of a grade A house. As a theatregoer I know this is not so. Zoning and protection have diverted as much of the normal patronage from neighborhood houses into first run houses as the latter can hope to get. Let us use Washington as an example. I attend the Ambassador house in Mt. Pleasant. Missing a picture there I may follow it to the Avalon, in Chevy Chase, or the State, in Bethesda. These are fine neighborhood houses. Their patronage is so different from the downtown houses that they do not even look alike.

There are seven downtown houses. Assuming that four of these—R-K-O, Fox, Palace and Earle—will qualify as grade A theatres and show an average of 40 pictures a year, it will mean that 160 of the best pictures will never play the theatres that I and thousands like me are accustomed to attend. Now I do not believe the elderly people, the very young people, and the people who do not wish to go downtown—not to mention those to whom a difference of from 15c to 25c is an item—are going to be clubbed into attending the grade A exclusive run houses. If I am wrong in my estimate of these people, the downtown parking problem will back me up.

But the plan has a more serious portent. Mr. Quigley in a fine editorial has echoed a warning that Allied has often sounded. He declares that "unless the industry preserves its position as the great purveyor of mass entertainment, it is doomed." The necessary and intended effect of Mr. Lichtman's plan will be to deprive great masses of the best in motion picture entertainment and restrict it to those who can and will patronize the grade A houses. Before doing this, industry leaders might do well to pause at the grave of the legitimate theatre and do a little soliloquizing. Whenever the great impressarios of the spoken drama had something good they doubled the prices and then compelled their patrons to buy tickets on the curb for double that. A generation grew up that had never seen a play because it could not afford to. They turned elsewhere for entertainment and the stage joined the dodo.

It is an appealing conception, Old Man Movie in a high hat, but I firmly believe he will go farther and last longer in a derby. May we not hope that out of this welter of discussion will come plans more in keeping with economic trends and which will not repeat the mistakes of the legitimate stage? What the industry needs is more widespread popular support, greater attendance, an enlarged market for films and more friends everywhere. The Lichtman plan would junk every argument made to the Ways and Means Committee (of the House of Representatives) concerning the great service rendered by the movies in putting the best in entertainment, relaxation and education within the reach of the humblest citizen of the land.

ONLY SOLUTION

W. S. BUTTERFIELD, President, Butterfield Circuit of Michigan Theatres.

The exclusive run policy is the only solution for the evils of the show business. It may take two or three years to work it out, but the business has arrived at a stage now where there should be different priced theatres in each town, each film completing an exclusive run in each house. I feel that the repeating of pictures at any time should be eliminated.

DETRIMENTAL TO SUBSEQUENTS

JOHN DANZ, Sterling Chain Theatres, Circuit of Seven in Seattle.

In my opinion it will be somewhat detrimental to the subsequent run houses, who cash in on first run publicity. However, if it helps the first run situation, it will make the industry as a whole healthier. Subsequent run houses will adjust themselves, show pictures for a lesser admission price and have a bigger field to draw from.

DISASTROUS TO SMALL TOWNS

MART COLE, Cole's Chain Theatres, Texas.

It is a little difficult to give you my opinion as to the reaction unless I take it for granted that this contemplated change would affect small towns as it applies to the city suburban runs. In this case, it would be disastrous. The city suburban runs have a large population to draw from and small towns with a limited drawing population must cater to all classes, with a varied admission price, and can not survive if they are deprived of the better pictures. Contracts could regulate the admission prices in all theatres, thereby protecting first runs.

GOVERNMENTAL REGULATION

Comment on the new sales plans for the distribution of films is very difficult, because of the lack of detail. A cursory examination, however, leads to the inevitable conclusion that the plans involve the vital rights of theatre owners, and the still more supreme rights of the public.

It seems to me that any attempt to maintain high level admission prices by denying copyrighted films to neighboring theatres would result in straight-jacket governmental regulation.

Just my guess—that's all.

NO IMPRESSION

Even if carried out, the Lichtman plan would make virtually no impression on the producing and exhibiting industry as a whole. You can count all the pictures strong enough to hold more than a week on your hands and have plenty of fingers left.

Yet it's pictures of that class you must have for the plan to become a vital factor. Of the theatres in the United States, probably 20,000, or at least a heavy majority of the total, are "little" or at least by no stretch of the imagination "Class A" houses. They have to have product and cannot depend on that of the two-week category.

Under the Lichtman plan, a "Class A" picture would be shelved for a season after its initial showing. It then would have no value as a repeat product, for styles in pictures change—hence a great source of present revenue would be eliminated.

CANNOT JEOPARDIZE

HAROLD B. FRANKLIN, President, Radio-Keith-Orpheum Corporation.

Any plan that would jeopardize the investment of even the smallest exhibitor and put theatres out of business cannot be adapted with success.

WON'T GET AWAY WITH IT

WILL HORWITZ, Exhibitor of Houston, Texas, Owner of Circuit of Suburban Theatres.

This is just another attempt of the producers to sew up the business. They can't stand independent competition. Under both plans none but producer owned theatres would get any

EXHIBITORS WEIGH LICHTMAN PLAN

Mr. Felix Feist asserts:

The circumambient atmosphere being full of discussion, not to say fireworks, on the subject of distribution, its problems and tentative expedients, with many a student of the situation thinking out loud, Mr. Felix Feist, general sales manager of Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer has issued a statement calculated to convey the official status, or rather lack of such status, of the discussed projects in a change of distribution methods, as applied, at any rate, to his concern. Mr. Feist's statement follows:

May 20, 1932

Due to circumstances which I am having difficulty in understanding, a curious and embarrassing situation has developed.

Doubtless the rumors of new policies in distribution that have been circulated by various sales executives have inspired trade papers to link my name into the matter and therefore the firm of Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer as well.

What is all this talk about a statement I was supposed to have made? What is this series of phony quotations that I see in the dailies? Why are these editorials appearing? Why do exhibitors write letters commenting on our new policy? What IS that policy?

I HAVE NEVER MADE ANY STATEMENT!

Some reporter must have been smoking a pipe.

He has announced a sales policy for M-G-M when no new sales policy has been adopted by Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer.

It's all bewildering!

I HAVE MADE NO STATEMENT ON A NEW SALES POLICY.

Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer has officially or unofficially adopted NO NEW PLAN of distribution.

Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer sales policies for next season have NEVER been announced!

Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer product for next season has not yet been announced.

Let's not go off half-cocked!

At the proper time we'll announce our sales policies and our product for the next season. Both will be good!

FAVORABLE TO PINEHURST

CHARLES W. PICQUET, Exhibitor of Pinehurst, N. C. and President, Theatre Owners of North and South Carolina.

I have not had the opportunity to study this new plan, but from just a casual glance the idea appeals to me very favorably in my particular location at least.

Whether it could be practically worked out is another question, but it has always been a source of great annoyance to me in Pinehurst where I have but one class of patrons consisting of people of the highest intelligence and refinement, who come here from all parts of the north during our winter season, that I have been obliged to bore them with mediocre products so much of the time.

For some reason it has been impossible for me to convince the New York sales managers that Pinehurst was perhaps the one isolated spot on account of it's particular clientele consisting of the most representative people from all of the northern states, and it has a group of guests who demand and who should have the choice of the entire product, and if producers did but know it the publicity of such a selection would be of inestimable value to them.

SMARTEST IDEA

PAUL SHORT, Melba Theatre, Dallas.

I feel that the larger or more exclusive first run theatres need protection different from the present arrangement. This selling of certain productions to a limited and prescribed list of theatres is the smartest thing that has happened recently—yes, it is the smartest idea advanced in ten years. I certainly hope that some such plan is soon worked out.

ONLY SALVATION

Such a plan as tentatively outlined is the only salvation for the houses with the big overhead. The price competition as it now exists with a subsequent run opening a very few weeks after the first run seems all out of line to me. I do not see where the picture situation will be affected for us of the smaller theaters with a release of approximately 700 pictures already outlined for the 1932-33 season's production.

Few Changes Seen In Poster Clauses of New Contracts

Few changes in contract regulations governing posters and other advertising accessories are in prospect for next season as far as the new contracts of Columbia, Universal, Paramount and RKO Radio are concerned. These companies, with Fox, are the only ones which have completed sales meetings thus far, and have more or less settled upon the provisions of new contracts.

The Columbia contract clause governing posters and accessories will merely specify that these materials must be purchased or leased from the company's exchanges, and must not be sold or given away or used in any other theatre than the one for which they were originally purchased. After use, the Columbia contract stipulates, the exhibitor agrees either to destroy or to return the materials to the exchange. Columbia executives say that this provision is designed to insure the exhibitor receiving accessories in good condition, and is not devised to hamper poster exchanges.

Universal's accessories clause remains essentially the same as in the old contract, the exhibitor agreeing not to sell or to give away his advertising materials after using them in the theatre for which they were purchased.

Paramount's poster regulations always have specified that the materials must be returned to the exchange after use. The same contract clause will be used this season and no innovations for enforcing it have been devised, according to James Clark, head of the Paramount purchasing department.

"Both the standard and the uniform contracts contain a clause requiring the return of used accessories to the exchange," said Clark. "Paramount's contract has always included it. There will be no change this season in the company's policy of enforcing this clause."

A definite policy governing the purchase or lease and disposition of accessories has not been decided upon yet by RKO. The company has under consideration a clause which would require exhibitors to return used materials to the company's exchanges, but a decision on its inclusion in the new contract awaits further study.

The new Fox contract will carry over the clause requiring exhibitors to return posters and other accessories after use. This clause was introduced late last winter in Fox contracts and met with widespread protest from exhibitors' and independent poster exchanges. Other large companies are withholding contract information until after their sales meetings have been held.

Protective Association Formed

Theatres' Protective Association, Charlotte, N. C., has been granted a charter at Raleigh. Its purpose is recorded as the protection and promotion of the interests of its members engaged in the theatre and motion picture business. Incorporators are L. C. Sipe, J. M. Gregg and E. F. Dardine.

Hodkinson Said to Have New Plan of Distribution Ready

W. W. Hodkinson, pioneer in motion pictures, will announce to the industry shortly a new system of distribution. Hodkinson has generally been considered the "father" of the present distributing method. It is said his plan goes further than that recently advocated by Al Lichtman of United Artists.

Hodkinson, on the Coast, refuses to divulge details of his plan. It is also reported that he is negotiating a deal to acquire independent product for release through a national independent exchange system.

SUBSTITUTION ARBITRATED IN "U" PLAN

against a competitive house, changed his admission prices so that he was charging less than the subsequent run. We have provided that if this occurs, the protection may be modified so as to do the right thing by the competitive exhibitor. The clause governing this is as follows:

"'If the exhibitor shall change the price of admission at the said theatre, from the prices prevailing at the time of the signing of this contract (which the exhibitor is at liberty to do), Universal may, if it shall be necessary in order to comply with contracts with other exhibitors in the exhibitor's competitive area, change or modify the run and protection to conform to the requirements of such other contracts. The run and protection granted the exhibitor are conditioned upon strict compliance by the exhibitor with all of the provisions of this agreement.'

"Another of the things which the new form sought to rectify was the interim time between the agreement of the exhibitor and the salesman and the final acceptance of the deal and completion of the arrangement. Under the old system, almost anything was likely to happen between the time the exhibitor signed the contract and the time he received it back with the company's okay on it. All the forces of competition had full opportunity to play on the exhibitor, and did play upon him, and in effect, the producer was the only one who was bound by this old contract until it was finally accepted. If it was rejected, the producer's next offer in that city was thoroughly prejudiced by the fact that the next exhibitor to whom the offer was made, realized that he was the second choice in the town. The producer was therefore in a most unfortunate situation. The new contract rectifies that in this way. The exhibitor is bound by the terms of the agreement for ten days plus twice the time which it would take for mail to travel between that city and the home office and the distributor agrees not to solicit any competitive exhibitor until the application has been accepted or rejected. The clause governing this provision (clause 13) is as follows:

"'This instrument shall be deemed an application for a license under copyright only, and except for the provisions of this article, shall not become binding upon Universal, such acceptance to be evidenced by the counter-signature of an officer or a person duly authorized by Universal, (which counter-signature may be evidenced by a rubber stamp or facsimile signature) and notice of acceptance sent to the exhibitor, whereupon it shall be and become binding on each of the parties hereto. Universal agrees that it will not negotiate with any other exhibitor in the exhibitor's competitive area for the same run of the motion pictures covered by this instrument as that herein provided for the exhibitor until this application shall have been finally acted upon by the proper official of Universal. The exhibitor agrees that in consideration of the foregoing this offer and application shall remain binding upon the exhibitor and will not be withdrawn by the exhibitor until ten (10) days, plus twice the mailing time by regular mail from Universal's exchange from which the exhibitor is served to New York City, after the date upon which this instrument shall have been signed by the exhibitor.

"'A copy of this application by the exhibitor shall be left with the exhibitor at the time of signing, and in the event of acceptance thereof as above provided, a duplicate copy signed by Universal shall be forwarded to the exhibitor.'

"The new contract is thoroughly readable. All of the old contracts were set up in one column all the way across a page of eight inches, all solid type matter. Being set in six-point, it was impossible to read it in anything except the most glaring light. The present contract is in larger type and is in two columns. To fit into the same space, the contract has been materially shortened by the elimination of verbiage, the combining and condensing of articles and discarding of all but necessary legal phraseology.

"The only thing that this contract lacks is a clause for the arbitration of disputes generally and at this time I am working upon a plan which I hope to be able to offer to exhibitors in the near future, under which voluntary arbitration of all disputes will be possible."

Protest Committee Adjourns

The "Continuing Committee" of exhibitors which developed the so-called M-G-M "Protest Meeting" terminated its activities this week. Dave Barrist, chairman of the board of the MPTO of Eastern Pennsylvania, Southern New Jersey and Delaware announced the cessation Tuesday in a statement which follows:

"The negotiations with Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer on the 25-30-35% policy have ended in failure.

"Unable to obtain the cooperation of the exhibitors in other zones, this organization has resigned its position of 'Moses' and will not lead the theatremen out of the wilderness of high film rentals. There's no fun in trying to save somebody who won't be saved.

"The Continuing Committee, resulting from the Metro protest meeting last fall, met with Felix Feist on April 5th. To this meeting were invited exhibitor leaders from various organizations, including a number from Allied. Only one replied, Abram F. Meyers, expressing his regrets. The others ignored our invitation, probably because our organization did not come out flat-footed for the Brookhart Bill in its present form, or for an immediate Congressional investigation of the industry. Only two exhibitors outside our organization attended that meeting, M. A. Lightman and Ed Levy of Connecticut.

No Agreement Reached

"At the conclusion of the meeting with Mr. Feist, it was agreed that only a joint statement should be issued and since no agreement could be reached, no statement has ever been published. Our organization takes this opportunity to thank Mr. Feist for the courtesies he extended to our members and for his frankness in showing us certain confidential records and data.

"Since those exhibitor leaders whom we invited did not see fit to cooperate, we must assume that their members are satisfied with the terms under which they are buying Metro pictures. Possibly conditions are better in their parts of the country and they can afford such prices. Or maybe they feel they have nothing to learn from this territory. If the latter is true, we ask those exhibitor leaders to compare conditions under their aegis with those obtaining in Eastern Pennsylvania, Southern New Jersey and Delaware.

"WE have no double feature evil.

"WE have no '5 and 10' movies, the minimum admission scale, with few exceptions being 25c. for adults.

"WE have more W. E. and R. C. A. installations than any other film zone.

"WE have fewer shooting galleries than any other territory, our neighborhood and small town theatres operating on the same high plane as first run houses.

"Stick to Their Own Knitting"

"And all the above, despite the fact that ours is a six-day territory and that in Philadelphia 298,000 of the 750,000 regular workers are now unemployed, with 150,000 on part time.

"We in Eastern Pennsylvania, Southern New Jersey and Delaware have decided, therefore, to stick to our own knitting and to look after the interests of our 600 exhibitor members.

"We are relying on the assurances given us by M-G-M officials that the legitimate complaints of our members will receive just and equitable treatment. Unless subsequent events prove that our faith is misplaced, we shall take no further action in this controversy at this time."

Executives of Metro-Goldyn-Mayer would not comment on the foregoing statement.

MPTO Condemns the Practice Of Dictation of Playdates

The Motion Picture Theatre Owners of St. Louis, eastern Missouri and southern Illinois recently adopted unanimously, at a meeting in the Coronado Hotel, a resolution condemning the practice of distributors in refusing to sell product to exhibitors unless such product is played on playdates designated by the distributors.

Renewing Efforts To End Cleveland Suit Out of Court

Renewed negotiations for an out-of-court settlement of the monopoly suit brought by Cleveland exhibitors against Loew's, Inc., the Cleveland Film Board of Trade and large distributors are to be renewed in New York this week. If the negotiations are not brought to a successful climax during the week, the case will be brought to trial in June, it is reported.

Samuel Horwitz, Cleveland attorney, representing the exhibitor complainants, returned to New York this week and conferred with attorneys representing the defendant companies on a reported settlement. Terms of the out-of-court agreement, as unofficially reported recently, provide for a reduction of first-run protection in Cleveland, subsequent protection to be made on an admission price basis and elimination of double features.

BRITISH BOARD SHELVES APPEAL FOR MORE STRINGENT QUOTA LAW

Move for Clause Fixing Price and Quality Fails; Exhibit Opens in London May 30, Many Nations Represented

By WM. H. MOORING, London

The Rt. Hon. Walter Runciman, M.P., president of the Board of Trade, has told the deputation sent to him by the Federation of British Industries and the British Trades Union Congress, that they may not hope for any legislation to amend the Films Act, 1927 (Quota), this Parliamentary session, but that he will instruct his department to investigate suggestions made by two bodies with a view to the possible adoption of these, wholly or in part, in the next session.

This sounds like a polite shelving of the whole matter, which has given the F. B. I. and T. U. C. something to think about for the past five months and has incidentally revealed one tiny point which the F. B. I. and the T. U. C. have in common.

The main object of the deputation was to lay before the Government a protest against the method pursued by a number of American-controlled distributing companies in Britain. These, it is complained, have satisfied the provisions of the Films Act as to the handling of a certain percentage of British films, by buying up or financing production of cheap second and third rate films which, widely exhibited as British, reflected discredit on the general standard of British films.

The deputation asked that a clause be added to the Films Act making it compulsory to spend at least £150 per hundred feet on every British quota film.

Other allegations were made against "the Americanizing methods of the Hollywood film."

The last thing the present Government or House of Commons would like to admit would be that such a plea held no appeal for the president of the Board of Trade, so a promise is held out in the usual language of the legislator. The British film industry may as well accept as a fact from this moment that nothing will be done on the lines requested either this session or next.

The case for the British industry was very ably made out; there is no answer to the charge against the American companies, that they have bought up and offered for rental some appallingly bad quota films.

It is even possible that their policy has been pursued deliberately to afford minimum publicity value to the British films as a commodity, though it is more likely that the compulsion placed upon them by the Films Act was resented, and led to their decision to abide by it in letter rather than in spirit. That there was no proviso in the law as to the quality required before a film could rank as British quota, is the fault not of the Americans, but of the British legislature.

Among those people who represented the trade at the Runciman interview were Michael Balcon of Gainsborough, Simon Rowson of Ideal, T. A. Welsh of Welsh Pearson, Hubert Marsh of British and Dominions, H. Bruce Wolfe of British Instructional, Neville Kearney of the F. B. I. and Sir George Beharrel, president of the F. B. I., who introduced the case.

A notable omission was John Maxwell, although it was understood that he explained his unavoidable absence. In view of the fact that his company, British International, has signed to supply films for purposes of British quota only, to at least one American controlled concern, his failure to attend may be interpreted in some quarters as a sign of incomplete sympathy with the aims and allegations with which the deputation was concerned.

Big Exhibit Opens In London May 31

An antidote for film trade depression has been devised by the British Cinematograph Exhibitors Association, and will be administered during the week of May 30 to June 4.

The International Conference of Cinematograph Exhibitors is to be held that week at the Grosvenor House, Park Lane, London, and invitations have been accepted by exhibitor organizations from France, Germany, Switzerland, Belgium, Austria, Italy, Spain and South America. Visitors are also expected from U. S. A. Most of these countries are sending parties numbered from 10 to 50 each.

But there is to be less talk and more business than is usual on such occasions, for the CEA has planned a mammoth Cinematograph Trade Exhibition to synchronize with the conference. This will occupy the whole of the gigantic Ice Rink, which is a feature of the Grosvenor; 35,000 square feet of space will be transformed into an arena housing roughly 90 different exhibits representative of every technical and service line utilized in providing the public with perfect and up-to-date cinema entertainment.

At least 20 firms which desired to take space had to be refused owing to lack of accommodation, while hundreds of concerns marketing articles not primarily of interest to cinemas were ruled out from the start for the same reason.

The total value of the apparatus on view will, it is estimated, approach £100,000, an insurance coverage of this amount having been arranged.

The complete success of the exhibition is already assured, because during three seasons previously much smaller affairs of this kind have produced excellent business reactions, although held in small out-of-the-way coastal towns.

Of still more topical value will be demonstrations of educational subjects filmed on 16 mm. stock. As a stimulant to official interest, leading educational authorities are being invited from all over the country. They are likely to be impressed by what they see, though I shall be very surprised if they do not discover that the more useful contribution to the development of the educational film stands to the credit of American-controlled concerns. This I foretold in MOTION PICTURE HERALD months back.

Ninety Exhibits of Technical and Service Lines Expected; Excellent Business Awaited; 200 Theatre Plan Announced

Mass Production In Cinemas

A plan to produce a chain of British theatres on mass production lines was announced by A. S. Woodger, well-known British financier, some three months back. His original aim was to erect about 50 on these lines as a start. He now declares that he has received instructions which will lead to the almost immediate beginning of erection of at least 200 such places.

The Society also at a later stage will build its own film studios, and, if plans mature, will start its own renting organization.

World Wide Will Release 28 Films

Seven independent production units will supply feature product for the 1932-33 releasing schedule of World Wide Pictures, with the possibility of additions, the company announces. The program at present includes 20 features and eight westerns starring Ken Maynard.

World Wide also is negotiating with Joseph I. Schnitzer and J. G. Bachmann for a series.

Contracts for product have been arranged or are in negotiation with Tiffany, one of the Educational units, headed by William Saal, which will produce the Maynard westerns and several features; Edwin Carewe, Bennie Zeidman, William Sistrom, Bryan Foy, Henry Hobart, Benjamin Verschliser. In addition negotiations are pending with Halperin Brothers. The number of pictures to be assigned each of these units has not as yet been decided, being partially dependent upon each unit's negotiations for story material.

New Sound Signal System Is Evolved by Powers Cinephone

Emil Velazco, of Powers Cinephone Studio, has announced a new signal system, Micontrol, designed by Kenneth F. Rice and Thornton P. Dewhirst, Powers engineers. It is designed for use in the scoring of silent films with voice and music, and is claimed to relegate music to the background during voice rendition.

Velazco has completed the scoring of the French feature, "Victory of Faith," with John S. Martin as narrator. American distribution is being handled by Benjamin Isaacs and Jack Goldberg.

COLUMBIA TO MAKE 48 FEATURES, 104 ONE-REELS AND 24 TWO-REELS

Product Will Include 26 "Columbians," 6 "Romantic Melos" Directed Toward Class A Theatres, 16 "Outdoor Dramas"

(Picture in Pictorial Section)

Home office executives of Columbia Pictures Corporation and branch managers and field staffs of the Eastern division gathered in Atlantic City on Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday of this week to discuss the company's new product for 1932-33 and to hear Vice-President Jack Cohn and Charles Rosenzweig, general sales manager, outline operating and sales policies for the approaching season.

There will be 48 features, 104 one-reel subjects and 24 two-reelers next year, as compared with 42 features and an identical number of one-reelers during the season just ending. The production budget will be proportionately increased, reaching a higher figure than ever before.

"The company intends to capitalize the universal appeal of the front page" in the selection of product and in merchandizing, an announcement said.

Contracts with exhibitors have been simplified for the future, managers were told, and Cohn indicated that salaries in the organization would be restored to their former levels just as soon as conditions warranted the action. Cohn also said that the company is in sound financial condition.

The company will, in effect, eliminate "blind" buying, according to Rosenzweig, who outlined to the convention plans for previewing at the home office all 1932-33 pictures as a means of determining the exhibition value of each, and the manner in which each is to be sold. The plan is embodied in a new clause added to the contract form and prepared by William Jaffe, head of Columbia's legal department. Rosenzweig told the sales force Columbia is not interested in "exclusive run" distribution.

Columbia will hold a second convention, for the Western division, at Hollywood on May 31 to June 3.

104 One-Reels in Eight Series

Of the 48 features to be released, 26 will be known as "The Columbians." Six "romantic melodramas," it is said, will be produced especially for Class A theatres and in addition there will be 16 outdoor dramas. These will be supplemented by eight series of single reelers, totaling approximately 104 films, and the new group of 24 two-reel subjects.

"The company intends to capitalize the universal appeal of the front page," according to a statement made this week, and expects to "insure greater entertainment value by taking advantage of the reader and playgoer circulation and the advance word-of-mouth advertising secured through the circulation of well-known books and long run plays. There will also be departures in casting, featuring more star and 'name' players; special emphasis given the woman's angle in each feature," and, it was said, "will continue its policy of casting each picture to fit the story rather than force stars into productions that do not suit them."

"Closer cooperation with the exhibitor and more direct contact between public, theatre owner and Columbia will be maintained throughout the year, as evidenced by the following services already inaugurated: the Public Relations Department, which maintains close contact with civic organizations interested in films; the 'Buck Jones Rangers Club,' the 'Scrappy School of Cartooning' and radio activities," the statement concluded.

The 26 "Columbians"

Titles of the 26 "Columbians," with names of stars, directors and authors, follow:

"Washington Merry-Go-Round," depicting political, social and romantic life of Washington, written by Maxwell Anderson, assisted by Eugene Thackeray and to be directed by James Cruze. Released just before the presidential election in the fall.

"American Madness," a drama surrounding a bank; supervised and directed by Frank Capra and featuring Walter Huston, Constance Cummings, Pat O'Brien and Kay Johnson.

Wheeley and Woolsey will star in a comedy to be selected, probably a stage vehicle now under consideration.

"Dance of the Millions."—"Two prominent stars will be featured."

"Bury of the Jungle," romance of the wilds.

"Brief Moment," S. N. Behrman's stage play, starring Barbara Stanwyck; a romantic comedy.

"No More Orchids," drama of contemporary life by Grace Parkins, Liberty Magazine serial, to be published in book form.

"That's My Boy," mother-and-son story from the novel by Francis Wallace. Farrar & Rinehart will publish the book.

"Rules for Wives," story of a "new marital code."

"Bitter Tea of General Yen," by Grace Zaring Stone, story of modern China. Herbert Brenon will direct, with a cast including Constance Cummings and Anna May Wong.

"East of Fifth Avenue," by Fannie Hurst.

"OK, America!" dramatic romance with musical background.

"The Double," Liberty Magazine story of a Hollywood star.

"Air Hostess," to be serialized in True Story Magazine. Aerial heroine and aviation background.

"Public Be Damned," drama of American life.

"The Destroyer," starring Jack Holt in Harry Hervey's drama of one of the Navy's "trouble ships."

Jack Holt will star in three features.

"Child of Manhattan," Preston Sturges current stage drama.

Two Anthony Abbot mystery novels; detective stories. Adolphe Menjou will create the role of Thatcher Colt and Irving Cummings will direct the first.

"The Dictator," based on Joseph Hergesheimer's novel, "Tampico"; Orient locale. Frank Capra will direct and supervise.

"Pearls and Emeralds," another True Story Magazine vehicle. "A story from real life."

The "Romantic Melodramas"

The six "romantic melodramas" which Columbia promises for particular appeal to Class A houses are:

"Obey the Law," drama of the Coast Guard.

"Full Speed Ahead," played against a railroad background.

"Transcontinental Flyer," a story of mail pilots.

"Speed Demon," racing story.

"Soldiers of the Storm," adapted from Thomson Burtis' Argosy Magazine story, a romance in the flood country.

"State Trooper."

The 16 "Outdoor Dramas"

In the "outdoor drama" group of 16 features there will be eight starring Buck Jones, presenting the Western star in a series of outdoor dramas by "outstanding Western writers," and backed by the exploitation of the "Buck Jones Rangers' Clubs" with a membership estimated at 2,000,000. In addition, Tim McCoy will star in eight.

Ten Series of Shorts

On the schedule of short subjects are ten series, including a series of two-reelers to be known as "Lambs' Gambols," comedies woven around the annual Lambs' affairs, and a group to be called "Sunrise Comedies," written especially for Columbia.

"Krazy Kat Cartoons," produced by Charles Mintz; "Screen Snapshots," Columbia's magazine subjects; "Scrappy," animated cartoons by Mintz; Walter Futter's "Travelaughs" and "Curiosities"; Bill Cunningham's "Sport Thrills" and Disney's "Mickey Mouse" and "Silly Symphonies" are listed on the schedule of one-reelers.

Jack Cohn Points to Sound Financial Condition of Company, Concentration on Product and Exhibitor Cooperation

Not in Theatre Business

The sound financial basis, selection of "a purely sales lineup" for the coming season, a continued policy of and concentration of all resources "only on good" pictures, and closer cooperation with the exhibitor were emphasized in the opening address by Jack Cohn. He said the company was amply financed, and, as has been its policy since its inception, will continue to devote its entire resources to the making of pictures without concerning itself in any way with theatre management or affiliation.

Cohn next read a welcome wire from President Harry Cohn, who had planned to fly to Atlantic City from the Coast but had been delayed.

Cohn drew applause when he said: "We don't have to cut down in any way. In fact we haven't even cut down on our personnel. On the contrary, we have increased the strength of our organization and have augmented our sales force so that, today, we have more salesmen with us than ever before. The same thing is true of our studio force, and we actually have some of the new product ready."

Charlie Rosenzweig, general sales manager, then took over the meeting and an-

Faded Paper of 1913 Recounts Words of Wisdom of one Rothafel, An Exhibitor

Poignant thoughts about the motion picture, its triumphs and its failures, its assurances and its problems are aroused by a faded old paper which Fred S. Meyer of Milwaukee's Alhambra has sent to the editor of MOTION PICTURE HERALD. It is a copy of "The Universal Daily" which Mr. Meyer edited and published in behalf of the Laemmle Film Service of Minneapolis as exploitation at the convention there of the Motion Picture Exhibitors League of America the week of June 11, 1913. There was then a rising young exhibitor by the name of S. L. Rothafel, speaking somewhat with the voice of leadership, and spectacularly operating the Minneapolis Lyric Theatre on a policy which assumed the motion picture was important, an important American institution—and was to be an art, for the whole people. Mr. Meyer, the editor, featured this youngling with a picture on page one, reproduced here, and presented an interview, in the course of which young Mr. Rothafel said:

Roxy—"The Youngling" Of Exhibition in 1913

First, and above all things, there should be perfect harmony between exhibitor and exchange. This is absolutely essential for the good of the business and the sooner this harmony is created in good faith the sooner will many of the problems now confronting the exhibitor vanish.

Do you, my brother exhibitors, realize that in your respective communities you can be as large a factor as your public schools or your newspapers? YOU CAN—but only by the most conservative and careful guidance of your business so that its handling will instill confidence in the people whom you cater to. Without this confidence you are merely drifting along with other chips in the vast sea of uncertainty, where every little puff of wind sways you hither and thither and some finally to be wrecked upon the reefs of failure.

I am only one in a great army, but fortune has been good to me and has placed me in a position where I can perhaps do a little more than my country brothers in illustrating and bringing home to the public at large that the motion picture is here to stay and take its place as the foremost entertaining factor of modern times through sheer merit of performance; that it is an institution that is and will be a benefaction to humanity at large.

Mr. Rothafel, today the impresario of the Rockefeller-Radio City amusement project now in the process of coming into being, may now take pride in one of the few forecasts of the industry which can stand quoting now after twenty exciting eventful years. We may, also, share a smile at the persistence of some of the problems and the industry's continued pursuit of that elusive "perfect harmony" of which he spoke in Minneapolis that day in June, 1913.—T. R.

Thompson Heads New Personnel Office Handling RKO Managers

Major L. E. Thompson has been placed in charge of a newly established personnel department at the RKO Theatres home office. The department will serve as a clearing house for house managerial changes throughout the circuit.

Thompson will approve all changes, although he will not necessarily make them. He intends later to classify assistant managers and others in the theatre staffs, lining them for possible promotion where warranted. Frank Hines has replaced L. Lannin as manager of the RKO Palace in Cleveland. Fred Cruise is managing the Mayfair in New York, coming from a similar post at the Fox Criterion in Los Angeles.

MGM Signs Colleen Moore

MGM has signed Colleen Moore for at least one picture on next season's schedule. Miss Moore has been absent from the screen more than two years. The title of the film has not as yet been announced.

Art Directors and Sound Men Meet to Consolidate Efforts

Art directors and sound engineers held a joint meeting last week, at the Warner Coast studio, under the auspices of the technicians' branch of the Academy of Motion Picture Arts and Sciences, to arrange for a pooling of efforts to advance set design from both pictorial and recording standpoints.

Max Ree, chairman of the art directors' section, and Wesley Miller, chairman of the sound group, arranged the meeting. Papers were read by Douglas Shearer, MGM, and Thomas Moulton, United Artists. J. A. Ball presided.

Cameramen See Developments

Latest sound camera developments were demonstrated for Coast photographers at a meeting sponsored by the technicians' branch of the Academy of Motion Picture Arts and Sciences last week, at the Paramount studio.

nounced the sales policy of the company. He described the product as representing Columbia's determination to bring prosperity back to the theatres, saying, "The Exhibitor doesn't live in the past. He is thinking in terms of the future and no matter how good our last season's product was, the thing he is primarily interested in right now is what are the chances of Columbia delivering a successful box-office product for the new season."

The entire morning session of Monday was devoted to a general discussion of the Columbia contract forms. These are markedly different from the forms used last season, and aside from the standard clauses on the reverse side of each form, are simple and easily understandable, managers were told.

Clubs' Growth Outlined

The afternoon's sessions were devoted to a round table discussion of the various contract forms. W. Jaffe, of the legal department, was in charge.

A talk by Harold Emerson, in charge of the "Buck Jones Rangers Clubs" at the home office, outlined the growth of these clubs. Some 600 have been formed, it was said. The branch managers and salesmen were instructed on the procedure necessary for the formation and operation of the club.

Again on Tuesday Cohn addressed the gathering. "I told you yesterday that we face the future with supreme confidence," he said. "Let me tell you why. It was only a couple of years ago that our competitors, in referring to us, spoke of 'Little Columbia.' Today there isn't an organization in the field which doesn't regard our financial position with envy. They don't speak of us as 'Little Columbia' any more."

"Overselling Not Good Selling"

Sales manager Rosenzweig again followed Cohn on the platform. He said: "I don't regard overselling an exhibitor an example of good salesmanship. And particularly is this true of the little exhibitors."

Rosenzweig then discussed the change that has taken place in the distribution. Trade marks, he declared, no longer mean anything.

Following a recess Tuesday afternoon Abe Montague, assistant to Jack Cohn, discussed the playdate situation and the need for a "playoff" on product sold during the past season.

Joe McConville, recently appointed home office representative and member of Rosenzweig's sales cabinet, then spoke. He was followed by Rube Jackter, assistant general sales manager, who also discussed the contract situation, L. Rosenfeld, general manager of Canada, and Sam Moscow, Southern district manager.

Sidney Salkow, Broadway actor and stage producer, has joined the Paramount Coast production staff as assistant to Benjamin Glazer, associate producer on B. P. Schulberg's staff.

U. S. FILMS STILL RULE IN MEXICO DESPITE RIVALS AND NATIVE HOPES

American Exporters Recognize Their Mistake in Sending Pictures With Too Much Shooting; Homemade Talker Liked

By JAMES LOCKHART, Mexico City

Although considerable and even frantic efforts are being made by European producers to regain the supremacy they once enjoyed in the Mexican field, and native enterprises have begun operations which they assert will give the Republic a celluloid entertainment industry of its own, America still rules the screens of her neighboring republican land. Of course, this competition from within and overseas does exist. But Hollywood needn't worry. While exact figures on the subject are lacking, it is apparent that practically all pictures shown in Mexico are made in the U. S. A. The native industry is still very much in its infancy. It seems that Hollywood will continue to provide Mexico with its cinema diversion for some time to come. There are many reasons for this, but the biggest of them all is that at heart Mexicans prefer Hollywood productions.

Too Much Violence

Back in 1905, when the motion picture began to be taken seriously in Mexico, the preference was for European productions. The reason seems rather odd: Mexicans didn't like American films because there was too much of shooting and other violent deaths for the characters. In those days, almost all American pictures sent to this country were "mellers." The exporters figured that they would be just the thing for such fiery folk as our friends just below the Big River. It took the executives about half a decade to discover they had Mexican tastes all wrong. Meanwhile, French and other European producers were walking all over the Mexican field, and it looked as though they owned it. Then American exporters got the range of Mexican fans' tastes and did a right-about-face in the kind of pictures they sent down here. From then on, they have been far in the lead in this market.

Some American pictures have raised much rumpus in this land. The latest example of the sort was Radio's "Girl of the Rio." Trouble started immediately when this production, retitled "La Paloma" ("The Dove"), was exhibited at the Regis theatre, a large and high-class first-run house. There were no demonstrations by the audiences, but the nationalists howled long and loudly and so did the newspaper critics. The objection was that the picture offended Mexican dignity, distorting Mexican traits, placing nationals in a bad light, and so on. Although the film had passed the censors, the Mexico City authorities, in view of the storm of protest from the public, ordered the Regis to quit exhibiting it after four of the six days it was scheduled to run. Showing of the picture has been prohibited in all parts of Mexico.

This was the first incident of the kind in Mexico in many years. About a year ago there were protests against American pictures in the form of whistling and booing to such extent that the lights had to be switched on and the police called in two large first-run Mexico City houses. But the cause of that trouble was not dislike of subject matter nor treatment, but because the films had too few Spanish titles. One of the films, of feature length, had only 60 Spanish titles. Greater clarification of what it is all about for Spanish speakers has eliminated repetition of such disturbances.

There is an element of Mexicans who prefer European pictures just because they are not American. But, after all, such productions are judged solely on their merits. Some pictures from abroad have inspired whistling and jeering. In discussing a British picture that appeared here a while ago, an educated Mexican dismissed the subject with the statement: "Too stupid for words, as an Englishman would say. Take too long to make their points. American technique is much superior." However, the British production, "Atlantic," was an outstanding hit in this country.

French and German pictures are pretty well liked by the better class of people of this country. A Mexican physician, with a large practice, whose favorite amusement is the pictures, told me that he had seen 20 times a German-made war picture titled here "Four Infantrymen," and he had paid for each attendance. His explanation was: "I like realism. Furthermore, there was one scene which the director very wisely prolonged. That was of a girl singing at a soldier's entertainment back of the lines. She was fully dressed, and how! Had on black silk stockings and snowy, lacy underthings and was not afraid to show them."

First Mexican Talker Liked

The first all-Mexican talker, "Santa" ("Saintess"), which was directed by Antonio Moreno, is evidently doing well. Some Mexicans, however, say that they don't like it. Moreno is directing a companion talker, "Eagles Before the Sun," for the national company that made "Santa." This enterprise got into action last fall and has established studios here. It is using a sound system invented by two Mexican brothers named Rodriguez.

The Mexico City civic government recently enacted a law, with a view to helping out the infant national industry, which demands that all exhibitors show at least two reels of nationally-made pictures a week. Some exhibitors are having difficulty in complying with this measure, which the government promises strictly to enforce, because of paucity of native-made films. As the law merely specifies the showing twice weekly of Mexican-made pictures, but doesn't specify the kind, most houses are exhibiting such shorts as airplane views of the towering volcanic mountains back of Mexico City, the inauguration two years ago of President Pascual Ortiz Rubio, and so on. Such subjects usually open an afternoon show twice a week, but don't appear at other exhibitions.

'HIGHBROW' PRODUCTIONS--AND TILLIE

Preference Poll Story Quotes Conspicuous Women But Shopgirl Wants to Feel, Not Think

The "National Movie Preference Poll" which is being conducted by the Motion Picture Producers and Distributors of America, Inc., this week issues a release which affirms that the returns indicate that women, rather than men, demand "highbrow" entertainment from the screen. The official story says:

Authors, clubwomen, society leaders, actresses, and other feminist leaders, unite in voting for biographical, educational, scientific and even classical themes while mere man seems content with whatever will bring him entertainment and relaxation. The view given by Joe E. Brown, the screen comedian, "I don't want to come from the theatre with more problems than I came in with," is shared by many prominent men in all walks of life.

"More For Their Money"

George Ade, who declares that "good movie theatres are giving patrons more for their money than they ever received before inside the walls of any playhouse," states the case for the men.

"I like any picture which has entertainment value and does not seriously attempt to set up standards of living, over-emphasize the grosser and more fleshly of the sexual relations, insult the understanding or leave a bad taste in the mouth," the famous humorist asserts. "I like nonsense if it is sheer nonsense and not nonsense trying to be a carbon copy of reality.

"Melodrama is the basis of all good theatre, whether you get it from a talking picture or from living actors moving about on a lighted stage. Melodrama may violate the probabilities and still be acceptable if it deals with emotions and impulses and deeds which reveal the essentials of human nature. Love stories, even of the super-heated variety, are welcome if they do not dissolve into hasheesh dreams of bare bosoms, wet lips and physical abandon.

"The discriminating movie fan does not demand sense or reason in a picture if the players perform divertingly and get over their effects by artistry instead of main strength. Charlie Chaplin, Buster Keaton, Jimmy Durante and Laurel and Hardy can do no wrong unless they offend that tender organ known as the stomach."

As for the Womenfolk—

Women, however, continue strong for themes that deal with such problems as war and peace, patriotism, civic righteousness and home and family life.

Typical of this feminine vote is the statement of Mrs. Kathleen Norris, wellknown novelist, who feels that pictures should represent the real life persons live and the real problems people face. As her own screen favorites she chooses, among other themes, drama depicting spiritual struggle and the current problems of social reform.

Cornelia Otis Skinner, the actress, would stress the artistic side of motion pictures, while Nancy Cox McCormack, sculptor and writer, believes that a taste for instructive films can be built up. Mrs. McCormack, incidentally, laments "too much crooning in both movies and radio."

Films that instruct as well as entertain are the preferences of many women leaders. Elisabeth Marbury, member of the Democratic National Committee, thinks that at least one such film should be part of every entertainment program. Princess Catherine Radziwill, society leader, urges that "movies should be used to educate, scientific films teaching the sciences and so forth.

Mrs. Dolly Gann, sister of Vice President Curtis, Zona Gale, the author, Mrs. William Averell Harriman of New York, Agnes Repplier, the essayist, Mrs. Margaret Sanger, of birth control fame, and Mrs. Andrew Carnegie, widow of the steel magnate, are among the many who vote for serious problem plays, and inspirational and patriotic themes.

Princess Alexandra Kropotkin thinks the screen has greater possibilities than the theatre, which must "conform to Aristotelian laws," but discards comedy, saying its "wise cracks are dull cracks."

Viscountess Byng of Vimy, wife of the great British war leader, votes for classical drama and tragedy among her other preferences on the screen, and Mrs. Conde Nast, wife of the New York publisher, urges patriotic films with stirring music and marches, believing that such pictures would do a great deal to lift the spirit of depression and show what a great country we truly live in.

Westerns Retain Draw

Nor have Westerns lost their power of attracting audience interest, the Preference Poll indicates. Generals and poets, business leaders and public officials, authors and educators, are among those who have registered their liking for the thundering stories of the once wild and woolly West. Action pictures, portrayals of the pioneers who conquered a continent, stirring chase and adventure on mountain and plain, retain their spell upon all classes attending the theatre.

General Hugh L. Scott, famous old Indian fighter and former Chief of Staff of the United States Army, of course puts "Westerns" among his first preferences. So does General James G. Harbord, one of the chief commanders of the American Expeditionary Force.

Admiral Cary T. Grayson, physician to three Presidents and Woodrow Wilson's close friend and companion, lists them along with his love of sea stories, as does also Dr. Rupert Blue, former surgeon general of the United States Public Health Service.

Governor James Rolph, Jr., of California, says of thrilling pictures, "They change people's minds in these days of stress. Nothing sad—no sorrow—more thrill."

Mayors vote strongly for the stories of Western life, among them John C. Porter, mayor of Los Angeles; Victor J. Miller of St. Louis; Richard L. Metcalfe of Omaha, and Charles E. Roesch of Buffalo.

Financiers Like Them Too

Financiers like Cleveland E. Dodge, copper magnate, and William Fellowes Morgan, New York philanthropist, enjoy them, as do railroad presidents such as Carl R. Gray, of the Union Pacific.

Colonel Robert Isham Randolph, head of Chicago's "Secret Six," prefers the old-fashioned Westerners.

Zane Grey, author of many "best sellers" on the same topics, knows well enough that the West has lost its lure, though Owen Wister, author of "The Virginian," does not list cowboy films among his preferences. But these other wellknown writers list them high: Ben Ames Williams, James B. Connolly, Edwin Lefevre, Berton Braley and Hermann Hagedorn, biographer of Theodore Roosevelt.

The comment and material presented are interesting, because as the newsmagazine Time remarks, "names make news." But it is also true that mostly that which is news is concerned with the unusual. In this instance it is the unusual woman who is quoted in the returns of the movie poll. The conductor of the poll is gunning for publicity space and sagely uses names to get it. But any showman will cast his eye over the names enumerated and know that what these erudite, conspicuous and militant women say they like has nothing at all to do with Tillie-the-Toiler, the busy, yearning little girl who supports the box office. Tillie will cast her vote along with Joe Brown, who does not want to go home from the show with any more problems than he had when he started out for the evening. Tillie wants action and satisfaction. She wants to feel, not to think and worry and reason. Women with causes, the authors of movements, are compelled to register intellectuality when they are put on the spot of a public ballot. Tillie is not on the spot and she can not be put there. She is not name enough to be news. But she is the cash customer.—TERRY RAMSAYE.

English Official Here to Set American Distribution

Hubert T. Marsh, managing director of British and Dominion Film Corporation, Ltd., of London, is in New York arranging for American distribution of the English product. He will remain at the Ritz Carlton Hotel for about three weeks.

Marsh claims two offers have been made for the company's film, "Good Night, Vienna," which has had a long run in London. He says he has refused the offers until he can make a deal for the company's entire product.

PASSING IN REVIEW

This department aims to present evaluations of new productions from the viewpoint of the showman, highlighting elements of special appeal to the public

SHOWMEN'S REVIEWS

Beginning in this issue MOTION PICTURE HERALD applies to the entirety of its surveys of new product a policy of endeavoring to deal with it exclusively in terms of the interest of the showmen who have that product to purvey to their customers.

Some months past, in one section of the review pages, THE HERALD began the presentation, over the signature of Mr. Charles E. Lewis, exhibitor and editor of the Managers' Round Table Club department, of discussions of pictures from the box office point of view under the designation of "showmen's evaluations." The experience of those months has indicated that the sort of treatment described has met the requirements of our exhibitor readers rather more closely than any other prior manner of presentation of new product.

The essence of the idea is that the exhibitor is concerned not so much with any critic's idea of "how good?" or "how poor?" but rather with the question of precisely what the product is and what is to be done with it when and as it is played. The exhibitor, in general, is concerned with the special aspects of strength and of weakness in the product, its appeals and shortcomings, that he may adequately deal with it when he becomes its sponsor to his public. This department, considerably amplified as to personnel and equipment, aims to aid the exhibitor as the retailer of the merchandise concerned.—THE EDITOR.

Symphony of Six Million

(RKO Radio)

Drama

This is undoubtedly a "great" picture—great in acting, in direction, in story and in general. But like "Street Scene" you must never lose sight of the fact that outside the largest cities the average fan knows little or nothing at all about the ghetto or the living conditions of the New York east side. Patrons not understanding these things are as apt to doubt the authenticity of such shots as of the over-luxurious homes so often pictured on our screens.

With these thoughts in mind you must not be carried off by advance information about this picture. Many were deceived on "Street Scene" and as a result took too much for granted. They learned, to their loss and discomfiture, that this type of picture must be intelligently sold and along such lines as will best appeal in the individual community being sold. As a matter of fact, why take chances when you have so fine a picture as this one? Why assume that your public will immediately grasp the significance of a plot among the poorer classes of New York's Ghetto? Sell it along the lines that will appeal to them. Sell it on its merits. There are certainly enough in it to make every lover of real entertainment flock to your box office.

Its audience value is what is going to make it a successful engagement even more so than its advertising possibilities. Nine out of ten patrons will go out shouting its praises and telling their friends and neighbors to see it without fail.

Names may not be too numerous or strong for most spots, but you can surely play up Ricardo Cortez and Irene Dunne and at the same time plug Gregory Ratoff and Anna Appel, whose outstanding characterizations will long be remembered by your patrons.

Read the press book thoroughly for a complete synopsis of the story and its highlights. See whether the ads suggested are not good for your theatre or whether they can be broken up to suit your own ideas of advertising in your local newspapers. You will find many good slants that will materially aid you in working out your show-selling campaign and should be productive of real results at the box office.

Perfectly OK for either the kids or Sundays. Nothing stands in your way of making a profitable run with this picture, and if it falls down then we can only attribute that to your failure to sell it the way it should be sold. Take nothing for granted. Let them know you are playing it and why they ought to flock to see it.

Smart advertising will produce the desired results and smart showmanship will do the trick.—LEWIS.

Scarface

(United Artists)

Drama

According to present trade reports it is questionable just how many states will permit the showing of this picture. But, perhaps like similar cases, it will eventually be OK for everywhere.

If there are no obstacles in the way of your showing this picture there is little doubt but that you can make it as close to a clean-up at the b.o. as any other picture to reach you in a long, long time. Possessing, as it does, so many magnetic selling angles; and being of that type of entertainment that seems to appeal to the masses—and the classes too—we should venture the opinion that where it is properly sold it will break records without much trouble.

"Scarface" may be branded as cruel, as depressing or as anything else, but it still has the box office "it" which we are always seeking. Taking its very introduction after the main title wherein they tell you that this is an indictment of gangsters, dedicating it to the hope that it will in a measure awaken the local, the state and the federal government to drastic action, you too can pick up the threads right there and sell it just that way.

The title is strong b.o. tonic. Regardless of what certain elements in your town may think of it as entertainment, regardless of the adverse criticism that may come forth from the local newspaper critics, it will still send the patrons home keenly conscious of the fact that they have been privileged to witness a most unusual picture and a terrific protest against gangster rule. If Paul Muni does not mean much in your town before you show this picture, rest assured he will mean plenty after the run is over. So forget about "unknown" names and play him right above the title. Ann Dvorak and Karen Morley can follow after.

Kids should not be admitted during the run of a picture like this and in every spot outside the large key cities it ought to be shown away from Sunday.

As soon as you get your dates set (and you might add an extra day or two, you may need them) get the press book and comb it from front to back. Lay out a campaign that should start with a well-timed teaser idea and work up to a big climax on your opening day. The bigger the campaign, the larger the receipts, is our prediction.—LEWIS.

Two Seconds

(First National)

Drama

Herein are offered two naturals for powerful marquee flash. In the first place, the name, Edward G. Robinson, long since proved a dynamic box office appellation, highly capable of standing alone; secondly, the title, which is packed with suspense, loaded with potentiality of impending dramatics.

The dramatics are there, even though they are all Robinson's. But a word of caution in playing too strongly on the suspensive element in the exploitation, despite the fact that the title lends itself so strongly. The conclusion is indicated in the opening sequence, which pictures Robinson being led to the electric chair. A doctor indicates that the body will be paralyzed when the current goes on, but the mind will remain active for perhaps two seconds. Dramatically strong is the opening, then the story cuts back, picking up what is going on in Robinson's mind. He relieves the circumstances leading up to his sentence—that is the story. The final sequence flashes to the death chamber; the current stops, watching reporters shudder.

It is strong medicine, put on effectively. The treatment is different, unusual. Let them know it. That will in all probability more than compensate for the necessary weakening of the suspensive element. Once the story begins to move, Robinson takes command, completely, driving through a sharply dramatic portrayal of an honest, hard working riveter, who is "roped" by Vivienne Osborne, ably presenting a dance hall woman. Robinson reaches his dramatic height, and the climax of the film when the court sentences him to death for killing her.

This is an adult offering, exclusively, with midweek perhaps the best playing time.—C. S. A.

Reserved for Ladies

(Paramount)

Comedy-Drama

While it may be true that Leslie Howard and the others in this English cast have very little drawing power for the average American theatre marquee, it should be kept in mind that despite this great handicap you have in this picture some fine entertainment. We will admit that its greatest appeal will be to the better classes because like all pictures of this type it is lacking in action.

We mentioned one handicap in the form of names. Another is in the title. Why they called it "Reserved For Ladies" will remain one of Hollywood's mysteries. In silent form, as released some years ago with Adolphe Menjou in the lead, it was considered a pretty good picture. Now in dialogue and sound and with an actor like Leslie Howard, it seemed to this reviewer that it was even better. More was made of the comedy situations by reason of the dialogue. But a title like "The Grand Duchess and The Waiter" would probably mean a whole lot more than this one.

In support of Howard you have a very competent cast made up of all English actors and actresses. Elizabeth Allan is charming and so are the "King" and Miss Allan's father, as played by George Grossmith and Morton Shelton. But the fact that they are good in the picture won't make it any easier to sell to the customers.

Audience value is unusually good. The picture holds the interest and runs along smoothly and with many good climaxes to keep the interest keyed up all the way through.

This is purely adult entertainment and should be sold as such. But you have a hard job ahead in all but the large key city first-runs. The smaller towns and cities will have to work up some sort of a campaign that will be designed to make them want to see this picture. But if you do succeed in getting them into the theatre they will be plenty pleased with what you show them.—LEWIS.

Congress Dances

(United Artists—UFA)

Comedy-Drama

For those theatres where the patronage is made up of the better classes, meaning the kind of people who like operettas, ritzy shows, etc., this one ought to get over fine. But when you start talking about the average theatre in the average town or city then you are getting out of the class where this picture will be appreciated. It is, in our opinion, a splendid picture.

Keep in mind that, first this is a costume picture; second, it is foreign made; third, it is over the heads of most patrons. Even here in New York when we caught this picture there were all sorts of comment being passed by supposedly hard-boiled New Yorkers. They did not seem to grasp the subtle humor or slants of the story at all. But of course, they can be classified differently, so maybe we had better pass them up.

The title can only mean what you make of it. It possesses no b.o. appeal except what your advertising copy is going to convey. Names are negligible and for most houses will mean little or nothing at all. Yet they are all fine performers and give excellent accounts of themselves.

Its best bet is its audience value. For the type of people who will like this kind of screen fare it will be swell. For others . . . well, you'll have to hope for the best or sell it like you've never sold before. Perhaps it will be worth taking a flyer at some totally different slant in show-selling and mapping out a campaign that is worthy of an attraction like this.

NG for kids and in smaller spots for Sundays. But anyway it ought to be played midweek. Put your shoulder to the wheel by getting all the information you can via the trade press and the press sheets. Then push it along as something entirely different from the general run of pictures.—LEWIS.

Lena Rivers

(Tiffany)

Drama

Here is audience value in a story which though in minor respects bordering closely on the melodramatic and in certain bits stereotyped in plot development, nevertheless carries with it an impression of sincerity which should prove entertaining to audiences. It is perhaps best adapted to the better type of subsequent run house.

Despite capable performances by leading players and adequate support throughout, the film has very little in the nature of a marquee possibility in player names. Heading the cast is Charlotte Henry, who might well be exploited as new, and good. Her portrayal is earnest, sincere, intelligent. The best names in the support are Beryl Mercer, always to be relied upon for a feeling performance in a character role; James Kirkwood, whose effort is natural, able. A more or less subordinate and unsympathetic role is handled by Joyce Compton, whose name may carry some weight.

The story's locale is Kentucky, with several race track sequences, well handled, supplying an amount of comedy is injected in the persons of several colored lads, seen in the paddock and about the stables. The theme concerns the girl who is taken in by a wealthy uncle and made to feel the fact that her father deserted her mother. (A prologue sequence explained that the mother died when the girl was born.)

Though there is nothing in the film in the least objectionable to the juvenile, it is likely that they will find little of unusual interest, with the exception of the racing sequences. Play it, otherwise, in any spot. There is nothing that bars it from the week-end.—C. S. A.

The Woman In Room 13

(Fox)

Mystery

What sounded like a swell box office and audience picture turned out to be a rather weak sister in the line of screen fare. But notwithstanding its shortcomings you can still build it up to fairly satisfactory receipts by reason of intelligent merchandising.

The title is the longest suit. It has certain elements of appeal that will attract, at the very least, your regulars. So if you want some extra patronage you'll have to be a good salesman. In addition to that title you have names like Elissa Landi, Ralph Bellamy, Neil Hamilton and Gilbert Roland, plus the presence of Myrna Loy. Surely, among that group you can find some good bets for the marquee and ad copy.

Audience strength is the short suit. It just falls short of sending them home feeling that they have seen a good picture. But here again you can make up the deficit by surrounding the feature with a good supporting program of short features and rounding out a good evening's entertainment.

It is not advisable to make too much of a mystery out of it because the audience is well aware of who was in room 13. Building up a campaign along the lines of "Who was the Woman In Room 13" will leave an impression that the whole mystery revolves about this slant. It did not strike us as being of that much importance. Better stick to conventional lines and work around the theme of the story wherein the divorced husband sets out to hurt his ex-wife and her second husband. It is more apt to create local interest than the other angle.

Of little use on the kids' special days but otherwise OK for wherever else you want to date it. Just figure on making up a good, diversified program and sell the entire show.—Lewis.

Riders of the Desert

(Sono Art-World Wide)

A Western

Here is a straight, dyed-in-the-wool western, with all the trimmings, including plenty of hard riding, popping six-shooters, racing pursuits through the mountains, and a band of Indians thrown in for good measure. The story is cut closely to pattern; the complications are usual, the villain performs in true western fashion. The title is a good western line, with its indication of space, pace, action.

Play this for what it is: a western, with lots of action. The picture, of course, most readily adapts itself to those situations, neighborhood houses in particular, where the public has its quota of western fans where the younger element of the population can come and get their western thrills. The boys should like the Indians, who appear but rarely in the 1932 version of the cowboy picture, and when they ride to the rescue of the sheriff's party, about to be trapped in a canyon pass, they should stand up on their seats and howl.

Give hard-riding, handsome and acrobatic Bob Steele the play, especially where he has his juvenile following. Gertrude Messenger makes an at least attractive feminine lead, handling the other half of the romance. The entire cast works hard, puts on a good show. Get the hidden gold angle up front. It's the reason for it all. The usual portion of impressive western scenery is present.—C. S. A.

The Tenderfoot

Comedy

Wide-mouthed Joe E. Brown again demonstrates his ability to draw the chuckles and laughs, though there may have been more laughter-producing moments in some of his previous pictures. Joe Brown as the tenderfoot is a laugh-getting title, and should be a patron-getting title as well.

It so happens, however, that the tenderfooting is reversed here. Instead of Brown being the city chap as tenderfoot on a western ranch, we have the western rancher, Brown, as tenderfoot in the big city, which is an amusing idea, and one very much worth while in the matter of exploitation. To further enhance the box office value, feature the comedian as a big-time theatrical producer on Broadway. He is played for a "sucker," but accidentally turns the terrible show he has bought into a sensational comedy and financial success.

Chiefly aiding Brown are Ginger Rogers, attractive, always appealing, doing well, although her role calls for but little real effort; Lew Cody, tough producer who takes Brown for a good thing, but has to listen to the last laugh.

Tell the prospective patrons that Brown rides down Broadway on the wagon of a rag-picker; that he goes gunning for the gang that kidnaps his leading lady; that he pursues them on horseback, roping the driver out of his seat at the wheel of a car.

There has been developed a yarn for the comedian which gives him sufficient opportunity to display his talents, and which keeps him in the spotlight all the way. Play it anywhere and any time. The youngsters should enjoy his cowboy antics; their elders will have many a laugh. It is not screamingly funny, but any set of patrons should have a good time.—C. S. A.

The Faithful Heart

(Gainsborough Gaumont)

Romantic Drama

(Seen in London)

This is a sweet, tender type of story which may not appeal very much to the tougher element, but which, as a follow-up to the sentimental "Michael and Mary," production, should enhance the reputations of Herbert Marshall and Edna Best, as artists, in this type of domestic romance. It is based on Monckton Hoffe's play and tells of the love affair of a young seaman and a public-house barmaid.

The love affair flourishes during shore leave, and the young sailor goes away and almost forgets the girl, who, however, becomes the mother of a daughter. In later years, when the sailor has transferred his services to the army and becomes a highly placed officer who is awarded the V. C., publicity enables the daughter to contact with him and for the first time to reveal her existence to him. Just as this stage he is engaged to a society woman, but he makes a clean breast of the past and the society lady and her associates are ready to overlook his link with illegitimacy so long as it is covered up from the world, and the girl is sent abroad. The girl, sensing that she is in the way, prepares to leave alone, but her father follows and they go away together, the father satisfied that in her exists an unbreakable link between himself and the "faithful heart" of his youth.

Adapted and directed by Victor Saville, it is skilfully produced and general opinion at the London premiere was that this would make an even greater success than "Michael and Mary."

The First Produced Book of Tiffany Thayer

A BOX-OFFICE MESSAGE

ZASU PITTS
THEODOR VON ELTZ

EUGENE PALLETTE
LUCIAN LITTLEFIELD

We have just completed a picture called "STRANGERS OF THE EVENING" with a remarkable cast.

This picture is the greatest audience picture that has been produced in the past two years. It has the laughs of a Harold Lloyd comedy, it has the thrills of "Dracula," it has the mystery of "The Bat." These elements have never been more successfully combined with an original idea than by the foremost American author, Tiffany Thayer.

The writer has previewed "STRANGERS OF THE EVENING" in the West, at the Leimert Theatre, Los Angeles, Cal., and in the East at the Proctor's Theatre, Yonkers, New York, and if you don't believe this is one of the greatest audience pictures ever made, call up the Manager of either house.

Here's our answer for something new; something novel and entertaining. Don't turn your back on a box office picture. This business is suffering from "ordinary" pictures. Here's a picture that is unusual. Here is a picture that has the box office drag of the biggest of pictures.

Are you going to sit idly by, or are you going to grab "STRANGERS OF THE EVENING" and put it over for all it is worth? Be a showman—give your people something new. This is it. If there is a doubt in your mind after screening this picture, show it to an audience and let them decide. Nobody in this business is qualified to tell what the public wants today. Let your audience be their own judge. There are too many of us trying to figure out entertainment for the people and getting nowhere—the public know what they want and this is it.

Film Exhibit a Feature at Atlantic City's Steel Pier

The Hollywood Motion Picture Exhibit will be a feature of the summer attractions at the Steel Pier at Atlantic City again this year. Every phase of the industry is covered in what is generally considered a valuable piece of "fan" exploitation. It is estimated that more than 2,000,000 visitors see the displays each year.

The exhibit this year has been augmented by various new attractions, including wax figures of certain stars. The exhibit is supervised by Ed Corcoran of the Paramount-Publix publicity staff. All major distributors are cooperating.

Use of "Revival Night" in Publix Houses Seen Success

The use of the "revival night" in Publix neighborhood theatres is pointed out as having resulted in a marked improvement in business, in an article in the circuit's house organ.

Numerous specific instances were cited where the addition of an "old favorite" on the revival night jumped the house gross far above the average figure for the particular performance prior to the introduction of the new policy.

Regis Toomey in Burr Series

Forced temporarily to decline a ten weeks' appearance tour which was offered him by Paramount Publix, Regis Toomey instead will be starred in a series of four features by the C. C. Burr organization. Toomey will start on the tour immediately following the completion of his agreement with Burr.

Schulberg Coming East

B. P. Schulberg, managing director of the Paramount studio, leaves Hollywood this week to attend the graduation of his son, Seymour, from the Deerfield Academy, Deerfield, Mass. He will return to the Coast in about two weeks.

New Series for Rin-Tin-Tin

Nat Levine, president of Mascot Pictures Corporation, has signed with Lee Duncan, owner of Rin-Tin-Tin, for the famed dog to appear in a series of Mascot features "Robin Hood, Jr.," will be the first.

Supreme Screen Names Fier

Jack Fier of Los Angeles has been appointed Supreme Screen Service representative for the California, Denver and Washington territories. He will operate local offices in Seattle, Los Angeles and Denver.

Roland to Produce Film

George Roland, producer, has signed Joseph Greenberg, member of the Jewish Art Theatre to play the lead in a production as yet untitled. Roland will direct for Standard Film Company.

Publicity Man to Marry

Melvin H. Heymann, on the staff of the MGM home office publicity department, will be married on June 2 to Cecil Gansler of Newark. A Bermuda honeymoon will follow.

JENKINS' COLYUM

Sherm Fitch, branch manager for RKO at Sioux Falls, South Dakota, is a dyed-in-the-wool golf hound. When we were telling him last summer about the number of fish we caught up in Minnesota, he said to us: "Now don't try to feed me that kind of stuff, you're a liar." And we replied: "Well, Sherm, we're both mathematicians, and the only difference between us is that when we are telling about our fishing we employ addition, and when you are telling about your golf you employ subtraction. You say you are shooting four when in reality you are lying four. As a matter of fact you are lying most of the time." And he said: "Well, probably you are correct. Get your clubs and let's go."

Do you know that a political convention is composed of the biggest bunch of moral cowards in the world? The Republican convention in Lincoln last week shied the Eighteenth Amendment and endorsed Hoover and his administration and then gave Senator George W. Norris a strong endorsement after he had fought every Republican President since he has been in the senate and had already declared he would support Roosevelt. While they were about it they should have gone ahead and endorsed the Democratic party and made a good job of it. It is said that God hates a coward, and if that is true, St. Peter won't give a lot of these politicians a pleasant look.

You watch both conventions in Chicago next June straddle the prohibition question. Both parties could straddle the Panama Canal and never rip a seam.

In a speech delivered at a meeting of the Academy of Motion Picture Arts and Sciences in Hollywood recently, Mr. Jack L. Warner lifted the lid and blew the foam off when, among other things, he said:

"It is a fact that when a man who thinks he is doing well in another line of business or profession at $60 a week gets one smell of celluloid he wants $500 or more. There is no reason for the difference."

Mr. Warner should be commended for giving voice to a truth that should have been broadcast some years ago. We would like to ask just where the fault lies for the unreasonable pyramiding of salaries beyond any sense of reason. Certainly the public has not been clamoring for it. Our six years of traveling among exhibitors has probably given us as wide a personal acquaintance with exhibitors as any man in the business, and we can't recall a single one who has sat up nights worrying for fear he would not contribute his share toward palatial residences, yachts and trips to Europe and Monte Carlo, but rather his attention has been centered on his overdrafts.

We can recall some years ago when the press agents bass drummed one star's salary at $1,500,000 a year, and that publicity became a sore spot among those who were playing his pictures at a loss.

It didn't help to cure this any when a star's salary recently was published at $30,000 a week. Can you imagine an exhibitor's feeling when he read that statement after he had played her pictures at no profit, and even at a loss? Is it any wonder that independent exhibitors' organizations have been formed for their own protection, and even their own existence?

The bidding of the various companies against one another for stars has put the skids under this business and run hog wild without sense or reason. Someone ought to tell the truth about this.

It is going to be pretty difficult to make the public believe that any "$60 a week" man or woman is worth more to the picture business than the President is worth to the whole United States, or the combined Supreme Court is worth to the Department of Justice.

The broadcasting of these unreasonable salaries creates a prejudice in the public mind, and to claim that a star drawing $10,000 a week is worth more at the box office than if he or she were drawing $500 or $1,000 is a lot of bunk. As a matter of fact, when the public is informed, the reverse is true, and the wonder is that producers have not found this out before. Be it remembered that we are talking from the standpoint of the public and the exhibitors. If we were a star we'd take all they'd pay us. But if we were a producer we'd have something to say about the salary.

We believe we speak for ten thousand independent exhibitors when we say that if any executive and his company can succeed in bringing salaries and other unreasonable expenses down to a reasonable basis, he and his company will receive the undying gratitude of all of them. And we might add also that there are some leaks up at the top of the barrel that ought to be plugged, too.

Do you know that you can talk a perfectly well, sound man into believing he is sick? If three or four fellows ask him what's the matter with him and tell him he is looking bad, by the time he goes three blocks they will have to call an ambulance for him. That's what we are doing right now with this depression talk. People today don't know what hard times are.

We used to wheel brick in a brickyard twelve hours a day for $1.20 a day and board ourself. Today if they offer some stars less than ten thousand a week they are highly insulted. We used to shoot ducks and geese on Beaver lake with an old "Zulu" and we took home ducks and geese, too. We used to fish for bullheads in the Kankakee river with a willow pole and a cotton line. Today nothing less than a fifty dollar rod and reel will satisfy. We have seen the time when a plate of sowbelly and beans looked like a Wampas banquet.

We have broken prairie with two yoke of oxen. Today we get up on the tractor and step on the gas and away we go. We will admit that it is a little tough to have to content ourselves with a Buick when we wanted a Cadillac or Lincoln. Back in Mother's time she made the girls' gowns; today they have to get them in Paris. Let's forget this hard times talk, there's nothing to it. Wait until you get hungry and the wind sifts through the elbows of your coat and then you can write about it.

J. C. JENKINS,
The HERALD MAN.

BLUEBOOK SCHOOL QUESTION NO. 129.—(A) Just what is a prismatic condensing lens. (B) May prismatic lenses be had in different diameters and focal lengths? (C) Is the converging lens of a Cinephor parabolic condenser always of one focal length? (D) Of what does the Cinephor parabolic condenser consist? (E) Is the Cinephor condenser collector lens always of the same focal length?

Answer to Question No. 122

Bluebook School Question No. 122 was: "(A) Exactly what is meant by 'Arc Voltage'? (B) What importance attaches to the angle of the lamp or carbons when using an ordinary arc? (C) Using an ordinary arc and assuming the crater floor to incline from the vertical at an angle of 25 degrees (or any other angle, for that matter), would the strongest illumination go forward to the center of the condenser? (D) Explain fully what importance attaches to the distance of the light source from the condenser, using either ordinary or high intensity arc.

There seems to be something amiss, and I don't quite know what. The answer to Question No. 122 is lost and since I keep no record, other than the printed one, of those answering, I will have to omit the list of correct answers and answer the questions myself.

(A) Arc voltage is the e.m.f., or voltage, necessary to overcome the resistance offered by the carbon gap and force the current across it. It is (Ohm's law) equal to current flow in amperes times resistance in ohms.

(B) In order that the greatest amount of light be received by the condenser, it is necessary that the light source (crater floor) face the condenser—be parallel thereto—as nearly as possible. Unless the lamp be angled, it would be impossible to burn a crater which would be even approximately parallel with the face of the converging lens of the condenser, but with the lamp and carbons angled properly this condition may be brought about, or very nearly so.

(C) Under such a condition the strongest light would not reach the center of the condenser, since it would go forward on a line at right angles to the center of the face of the crater, or under the conditions assumed in the question, toward the lower front end of the lamphouse.

(D) The light goes forward from the crater floor in a very wide cone. Were it possible to place the face of the converging condensing lens within one inch of the crater floor, practically all light would be "picked up" by the lens. However, as the face of the converging lens is moved back away from the light source, it is evident that less and less of this cone of light reaches the face of the lens. All the rest is lost. Figure 36H, Vol. 1, of your Bluebook of Projection illustrates the enormous losses set up by moving the converging condenser lens away from the light source. In this figure we see that it would require a lens 7¼ inches in diameter to pick up the same amount of light at a distance of 4½ inches from the light source that is picked up by a lens 4¼ inches in diameter at 2½ inches from the light source. In the same figure we see that if a converging condenser lens 5¾ inches in diameter be located 3½ inches from the light source, it would require a lens 6½ inches in diameter to pick up the same amount of light at a distance of 4 inches. Very great importance therefore attaches to the matter of keeping the condenser as close as possible to the light source.

Small Town—Big Town

E. C. Van Fradenburg, projectionist at the Valley theatre in Manassa, Colo., writes: "I am of that numerous tribe known as 'small town projectionists.' I believe small town men are different from those employed in larger houses in cities. I also believe our problems have not been given sufficient consideration, either by exchanges or by equipment manufacturers.

"Perhaps the answer to some of our troubles may be thought to lie in a trade school where projection might be taught, but those who have been at it as long as I have well know that to be impractical. A lot of theory may be obtained in such schools, but the fellow who gets the show through is almost invariably the one who has spent many years 'sitting' on a pair of projectors. It therefore seems that the only solution for us smaller town fellows is to give the job all we have, study all the literature available and do the best we possibly can to work things out for ourselves.

"In this connection, I may say I have found the Bluebooks to be of the utmost value. They answer many hundreds of questions which otherwise might and probably would remain a puzzle. They also give the man who studies them a broader view of his job, and of the many ramifications of that job. These books, taken in connection with your departments in MOTION PICTURE HERALD and BETTER THEATRES, might well constitute the projectionist's bible, because through them his soul may be saved from the torment of wondering what it is all about, with but little idea of knowing the remedy in any given situation.

"I own practically all the standard text books covering projection matters, but find most of them to be 'not so good.' One is too simple. It may be suitable for the manager who merely wants a general idea of projection matters. Another is not too clearly written and very often is in error. Still another does not cover the subject thoroughly. Even the Bluebook might be improved, though frankly, I really don't know how. Everything I know of in this world can be improved, though. Taking them by and large, the Bluebooks seem to me to be the answer to the operator's dream, in that by their use he may in time become a projectionist."

MR. FRANKLIN WANTS TO KNOW!

IN "R.K.O. NOW," the official house organ for that circuit, H. B. Franklin asks: "What has become of the manager who regarded his theatre as his own . . . who knew everything that was to be known . . . from engine room to projection room and stage?"

We'll try to tell you, Mr. Franklin:

Circuit operation,—as seen through the eyes of some now forgotten men who tickled their own vanity by pinning fancy titles on themselves,—took these men, their individuality, their aggressive ability, their creative instinct and everything else that went with it. Took these many important things and choked them to death under a reign of home-office circuit management. Made puppets of them, or robots, if you will.

They said "No" to every request these fine showmen had to offer even before they had a chance of finding out whether the request was good or bad. They decreed that no house manager should use his own individuality of judgment without first consulting the home office. They fired the first man who dared violate this edict. They stamped out the house manager's enthusiasm by throwing cold water on his ambitious hopes to accomplish something that would gain him favor in the eyes of this unseen monster, "the home office."

And when they thought that the manager could get into possible mischief by not being busy all the time, they worked out a ridiculous system of home office reports on a dozen different details and passed the word along so that each department made similar demands on the house manager.

The time he spent in the old days watching the acts rehearse so that he could get acquainted with them and possibly improve his show, he now spends opening mail from the home office and trying to figure out what he can say in answer to each of these letters.

The hours he spent doping out ways and means of stimulating business he must now spend trying to turn out a thousand dollar advertising campaign for twenty-five dollars because a home office order to that effect told him to do so regardless of existing local conditions.

As for joining with the local Lions, Kiwanis or Rotary Clubs, some circuits—look through your company's files Mr. Franklin — actually ordered their managers to resign and not take any part in such activities because they thought it was taking the manager away from his job too much.

He no longer circulates among the people of his community because national circuit operation makes being away from the theatre a capital offense punishable by dismissal.

The little things about his theatre and the way he ran it are not found now because he is too worried about being shifted or let out. A thought sponsored by certain circuit officials a short time back under the impression that to get the most out of its manpower, the manpower should be kept "worried" as much as possible.

He cannot maintain his former newspaper contacts because every little thing he can do must first be approved by an endless chain of bosses. Then if it doesn't work out according to everyone's satisfaction, they all pass the buck back to the house manager. He has no one to pass it on to—so he takes the rap.

He no longer has courage, vision and independence because they have made him put his tail between his legs, blindfolded him and squelched his independence by making him ever fearful that he will be out of a job and unable to support his family.

But, Mr. Franklin, there's life in the old boy yet.

Take these same men, give 'em a little encouragement, a friendly pat on the back, a little of their former freedom in thought, action and the running of their theatres and we'll wager you our last year's shirt against your old high hat that they'll come through with flying colors and again make history in the show business—in profitable showmanship—in efficient management—in local respect.

Someone must show the others the way. How about you H. B.? Will you be the one to lead the parade back to common-sense ways? You are the head of a large national circuit. A circuit old in tradition and one of the biggest factors in circuit operation. If you succeed the others must follow because they cannot afford to watch their theatres go to the dogs—(even if the dogs would have them.)

Quoting Mr. Franklin again: " . . . I further think that under the policy which has been established for the operation of RKO Theatres, Inc., he (the manager) will make himself a decisive factor in our success."

The show business can again be as great an industry as it was in the days before national circuits tried—and failed—to reverse every angle that was right for what they considered their own personal better judgment. They are paying dearly for their mistakes. Under genuine leadership and respect for the ability and personality of the house manager the theatres of this country can once again become a well paying business.

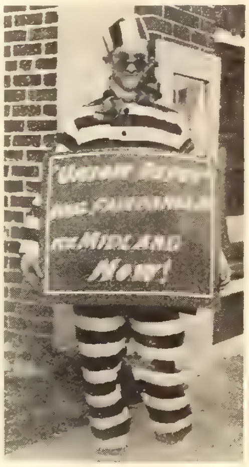
CARROLL RAN A BIG FOOD AND CLOTHING SHOW AT HIS HOUSE

Just to let his fellow showmen know that Glenn Carroll is still on the job of managing the Midland Theatre, Coffeyville, Kans., it is our pleasure to record that he is and that recent efforts put forth on a special food and clothing show resulted in the turning in of some 1,000 assorted articles, each accepted as an admission. It was a popular stunt and netted his theatre both community good will and generous mention in the newspapers.



The small photo on this page shows an attention-getter used on "Union Depot," which consisted of a walking bally dressed in convict suit. The man also wore goggles.

Carroll appears to think his food and clothing show a little late in the way of an offering to other members of this Club but it is quite possible that there may be a considerable number who have not yet made a move along these lines. In that case it's never too late to pull one, if the idea fits local conditions. As to his bally on "Union Depot," perhaps a striped suit had no particular bearing on the picture but it's something that will always get a look when not over-worked. Thanks, Glenn, for your reminders.

ROUND TABLE BIOGRAPHIES

According to biographical data, Dr. S. Naify had full intention of following the medical profession at one stage of his life, but it seems that the lure of showbusiness proved too much of a temptation when he reached the age of 35 years.

Dr. S. Naify

Maybe his two brothers, Fred and Lee Naify, had something to do with shaping his destinies, for they're both in the show game; Fred manages a house in Chico, Calif., and Lee does likewise at Martinez. At any rate, we find the Doctor starting as assistant manager of the California and Mystic Theatre, Petaluma, Calif., where he was later promoted to full responsibility.

Naify was born in Damascus, Syria, in the year 1890 and received his education in schools in Syria and Constantinople, Turkey. During the World War he served as a doctor in the Turkish army. However, if he had to start all over again, indications are that he would have put that time in the theatre business instead of medicine, for he states that he hasn't any intention at the present of ever leaving this game for another.

If good things run in "three's" then we can readily understand why the Naify family has contributed three corking fine showmen to this business.

FELDMAN FEATURED SHORT SUBJECT AS PLUG FOR KID SHOW

A tie-up recently engineered with a local newspaper by Joe Feldman, Warner publicity manager at Albany, N. Y., for a special matinee in connection with a nationwide stunt on Ripley's "Believe It Or Not" resulted in the attendance of 1,500 kiddies and a large number of adults. Several Ripley-Vitaphone shorts and a special local talent show, starring kiddie pupils of the city's leading dancing and music studios, were featured. The paper backed the tie-up with a number of illustrated stories.

MASKS FOR A MASK PICTURE WAS OKAY WITH J. ROSENTHAL

Regulation black linen masks were used to exploit "Behind the Mask" by Jake Rosenthal, manager of the Iowa Theatre, Waterloo, Iowa. Beyond the fact that he used them we can add no further information except that copy on mask read, "You are challenged to see 'Behind the Mask'—Thrills with Chills, etc., at the Iowa Theatre." However, it's a cinch the gadgets received wide distribution and furnished amusement for a lot of folk.

EXCHANGE MATS AND NEWSPAPER ADS!

Recognizing the necessity of helping theatres too small to afford the services of an ad artist, the Round Table Club has enlisted the aid of Kenneth Long, formerly of Paramount-Publix and an experienced ad-layout man, to contribute a series of articles and illustrations on how to turn out attractive newspaper advertising through the intelligent use of regulation exchange mats plus seat-selling copy.

THE FIRST OF THE SERIES APPEARS IN THIS ISSUE. Look it over and read it carefully. Even if you have been handling your advertising along these lines you will find many helpful suggestions from Ken Long's ideas. And if you are still so old-fashioned as to be using type alone in your present ads, then here is the way to get going along more modern lines.

The industry needs many more men of Ken Long's type. Men who can take advantage of the mats which are turned out for every picture and work them into their daily newspaper ads. There is no reason why every showman can't be making up attractive advertising. Here is a glorious opportunity of getting some cost-free education in the art of making up newspaper ads of the better kind. "Chick"

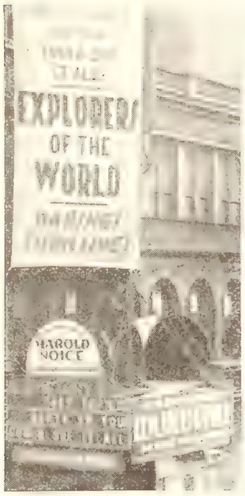
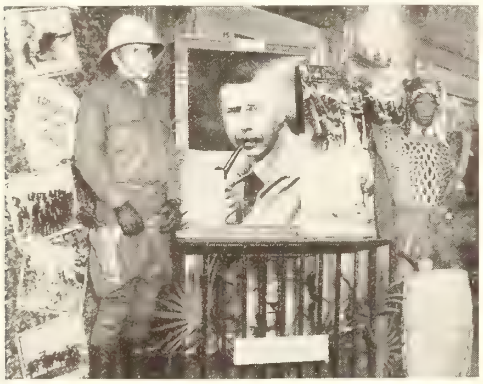
JACK HOBBY WAGED EXCELLENT CAMPAIGN ON A JUNGLE PICTURE

When the RKO circuit made test showings of "Explorers of the World," Providence, R. I., where Jack Hobby manages the Victory Theatre, was one of the key cities chosen for presentation of that picture. Theatre front, an atmospheric lobby and window displays all played a part in a successful campaign.



First note the front, with its large banner on portion of the building above the marquee; marquee copy of "They Defied Death So That You Could See It All," the large, special valance on front of the marquee, and the atmospheric decorations of animal heads, tusks, etc., at either side of entrance. A sign atop the marquee also advertises stage appearance of a famous explorer in "Jungle Adventures."

The other photo shows how the atmospheric effect was carried out in the lobby. The portrait of Noice, the explorer, was flanked on either side by two individuals, one dressed in explorer's toggery and the other, a tom-tom beater, with leopard skin and native head-piece. Below the portrait is a cage that contained a lion's head and skin, which was realistically moved along with a "groan box," to produce the desired effect. The tom-tom beater also contributed his share of the noise. Several excellent displays were obtained in windows in buildings located at important points in the city.



This jungle picture produced excellent returns for the Victory as the result of Hobby's efforts and so he's passing along the highlights of his work for the benefit of other Round Tablers. His fellow showmen have often had an opportunity to read accounts of Hobby's exploitation activities and we'll be looking for other examples in the future.

Set For Graduation

INTRODUCING KEN LONG—

The chap who is going to tell you how to make up swell newspaper advertising by combining exchange mats with attractive layouts. As for his qualifications to handle so important a task, we offer herewith a brief resume of his experiences in connection with this type of work:

He is twenty-five years old and married.

From 1922 to 1925 he was with the Brockton Photo Engraving Company, where he learned all there was to know about photo engraving from beginning to end.

1925 to 1927. With the Brockton Theatre handling publicity and advertising and getting a closeup picture of the inside workings of theatre management and operation. Doubled on local newspaper, where he spent all spare time, enabling him to get a line on the range of type faces, borders and composition in particular for the makeup of theatrical advertising. Also read through any book on the subject that he could beg, borrow or steal.

Aug., 1927, to Oct., 1927. Left the theatre to handle a commercial advertising account for a shoe company with thirteen stores in New York City. It was while doing this type of work that he met Lem Stewart, advertising manager for Publix Theatres, and then,

From Oct., 1927 to April, 1932, he worked under Stewart—(a swell guy to work with any day)—in the makeup of ads for the Publix manuals and other work along the same lines. During this Publix connection he made many fine suggestions showing how regulation exchange mats could be worked into newspaper advertising for theatres without ad artists.

Taking advantage of his brief time in between connections, the Managers' Round Table Club prevailed upon Ken to devote some spare time to this most important series. So thorough are Long's ad suggestions, that even the most inexperienced showman can sit down and follow the methods recommended and, as a result, improve their theatre's newspaper advertising tremendously.

Although we know that Ken will again be tied up with one of the home offices we are hoping that he will find time to continue this series indefinitely.

Sonosky Back in Aberdeen

A. J. Sonosky, a former Aberdeen, Wash., theatre man, recently returned to that city as manager of Publix houses, succeeding J. C. Strock, who has been temporarily filling the post following transfer of J. T. Stroud to Minot, S. D.

Since leaving Aberdeen seven years ago Sonosky has filled a number of important executive posts in various theatres, his last job being that of manager of the Riviera Theatre in St. Paul.

Stroud, who served as Aberdeen manager for the past two years, has already assumed his duties as Publix manager in Minot.

HARRY MARCHAND IS USING A GOOD GAG TO GAIN PUBLICITY

That enterprising showman, J. Harry Marchand, manager of the Crown Theatre, Mobile, Ala., has been cashing in on some corking publicity as the result of a tie-up he made with a local newspaper on a "Roving Observer" gag. Here's the way it works:

Each day a number of local residents are singled out by a mysterious "roving observer" who presents each one with a guest ticket good at the Crown Theatre. We gather that he is one of the leg men on the paper, for it is stated that this phantom creature will be everywhere, presumably at one time, and no one but a reporter could hope to qualify for such an assignment. He chooses at random a number of people along his beat. These he will describe in the next issue, for example, as follows:

"If the small boy who left his romping to dash across the lawn at Marine and Government streets to pick up a glove for a lady . . . if the middle-aged man who had so much difficulty clamping down the radiator cap on his car while it was parked on Daughin street . . . if the Dauphin street merchant who wisecracked to the observer that 'business was looking up—it's flat on its back' . . . if the lady in the blue dress who ran out of her house on Jackson street yesterday evening shouting 'just a minute, just a minute' to friends waiting in a car," etc., etc., they may call at the newspaper office and receive a free ticket to the current show.

Looks Like a Winner!

The above excerpts culled from several tear sheets will convey a clear idea of what Marchand's stunt is all about and to us it looks like a corker. The paper is playing it up as a daily feature under a two-column head and it has been the means of obtaining a lot of publicity at the cost of very few tickets.

We are also running a reproduction of one of Marchand's cooperative ads on this page; one which appears in slightly different dress. Note that the photograph angle is strongly played up by a large cut of James Dunn and Sally Eilers. The photographer paid for all tickets except 20 at matinee prices and gave one with every order for one or more photographs. He likewise stood the cost of ads on both newspapers. Seems to us the ad carries appeal for the reason that it is different than the usual run of co-ops.

Try the above on your photographer and also the other stunt on your newspaper. Both appear to have unusual merit and we're obliged to J. Harry for making it possible for us to pass the tips along.

Follow These Suggestions Each Week and Improve Your Style In Newspaper Advertising; It Explains Just How To Do It!

(The man responsible for this, the first of a series, is described on the opposite page. After you have read about Ken Long and then followed this first advertising article, sit down and tell us how we can improve the idea and the series. Do you think it will prove helpful to you and your advertising?)

Dominating emphasis with small ads can be accomplished with intelligent use of producers' exchange mats plus standard newspaper equipment. The purpose of the press sheet is to offer showmen the best material possible, at a nominal cost, with which to advertise a certain picture. With shrewd manipulation of this material, small ads that sell can be made.

On this page are a few layouts in illustration. (Owing to the limited space, it is necessary to reduce them.) These ads adhere to one of the most essential rules in newspaper advertising . . . SIMPLICITY! They also have character! They have unity! Copy and illustrations are arranged in an orderly fashion. Such ads represent profitable investment. Let's learn how to make them!

Look at the ads in the press book on "Two Seconds." Great stuff, aren't they! Let us assume, however, our budget allows as a maximum a two column by five and one-half inch ad on the evening before opening. With this in mind, and after reading the synopsis (if we haven't already seen the picture), and after studying the ads in the press book, we pick mats Nos. 8 and 17 for the illustrations. Illustration "A" is our rough layout ready for the compositor. Note the type markings on the left. This is important! It enables the compositor to set the ad exactly as we have visualized it.

Illustration "B" is our opening day ad . . . one column by six inches. Mat No. 6 is used. No matter how small the ad, the type markings are important.

Illustration "C" is our "day after opening" ad. Mat No. 12 is used.

Illustration "D" shows our "day before opening" ad on "State's Attorney." Mats Nos. B-3 and B-22 are used.

Of course, several different layouts can be made using the material we have selected in illustrations "A," "B," "C" and "D." The fact still remains that small ads with very definite sales values can be made from producer's material. Let's put more thought into the preparation of our smaller ads.

Here are a few rules to keep in mind when preparing your newspaper campaign. . . .

Illustrations. Select illustrations (mats) that are clear and simple. Never use a portrait illustration that is not a likeness.

White Space. Devote from one-fourth to one-third of layout to white space.

Focal Point. Do not break newspaper display into too many small units.

Display Lines. Use medium or heavy type, caps and lower case, for captions; and either capital bold-faced or capital characteristic type for all display lines; light-faced type for body copy of ad.

Black or White. Solid black in illustrations does not necessarily mean dominance. In the face of heavy pictorial competition, a delicate outline will catch the eye first. It is a matter of contrast—do what the majority are not doing.

Headlines. Unusual catch-lines that tease the imagination are a great help.

Borders. Never use the all around, heavy black border. Save that for the "undertaker."

NOBLE WAGED FINE LOW COST CAMPAIGN ON TARZAN PICTURE

We note that Ralph Noble, advertising manager of the Arkansas Amusement Corp., recently waged an interesting and effective campaign on "Tarzan, The Ape Man," which is particularly noteworthy because of striking display obtained at low cost.

The accompanying photo will serve to illustrate in a mild way the attractive atmospheric front and huge duck banner hung on the front side wall of theatre. A solid grass front enclosed the entire theatre front on which was mounted two six foot circles with title and catchlines. The title and border of the circles were studded with lights. Fourteen by seventeen photo enlargements were mounted on background and across the front.

A jungle type enclosure four feet high, along both ends and front of marquee, was mounted with cutouts of jungle animals, apes, rhinoceri, and Tarzan and girl riding head of elephant. The title on both ends and front of marquee was studded with lights.

The large, duck banner on the side wall measured 22 x 36 feet and extended from the top of the building to a twenty-four sheet panel at the bottom. The panel had a black cloth background and in addition to title and cast carried an eight foot cutout of Tarzan and girl swinging through trees.

As to material and cost the entire front was executed at less than $50. The grass was obtained in an open field a short distance from the city. The front on which the grass was mounted was used on several other pictures; likewise, the marquee enclosure. The light receptacles were salvaged from an old electric sign. The wall board and duck banner were the only items purchased especially for the occasion. Material and sewing on the banner set the management back exactly $13.82. The wall board cost $6.08, and about $4 for paint and nails brought the total of the display up to $23.90.

We have another photo at hand but it's too faint to show the corking tie-up that Noble made with a local department store on B. V. D. Swimsuits. Two live models with kodaks stood in the window and took pictures of those who appeared outside. Two regular store forms were also draped with suits. The photos were developed inside the store and within a short time displayed in both window and theatre lobby. Those who identified themselves were given guest tickets to the show. This tie-up was very effective. The reason the photo is too faint to reproduce is because a rail had to be constructed to keep the crowd from pushing in the glass.

TARZAN

This is the first time we've heard from Ralph Noble in quite some time and he modestly alibis his silence with the statement that nothing really worthwhile was done in the interim. That is difficult to believe and we hasten to assure him that this department will welcome all kinds of information that can be passed on to other Club members.

WALTER MORRIS SENT OUT TIMELY LETTERS TO GRADUATING CLASS

Graduation courtesies are a timely subject and of this we are reminded by glancing through a letter recently sent out by Walter Morris, manager of the New Broadway Theatre, Charlotte, N. C. The letter is so well framed that there appears no reason, to our way of thinking, why it shouldn't serve as a model.

> Congratulations:
> To you, as a member of the class of 1932, the Broadway Theatre extends heartiest congratulations on your graduation. During the past years we have been a part of your school life and now want to be a part of your graduation festivities and ask that you be our guest the week of May 30th, which is "commencement week" with all of us.
> You are probably graduating with mingled feelings of joy and regret. Joy in having successfully completed your studies and stepping out to find your place in the world—regrets at leaving old friends, old associations and friendly places.
> However, there is one institution you and your friends have enjoyed that will continue—the BROADWAY THEATRE, one of the Warner Bros. Theatres. No matter where you go from coast to coast, you will always get the same friendly welcome in over 700 Warner Bros. Theatres.
> And so in addition to extending our congratulations, we wish to present the enclosed graduation courtesy as an expression of our sincerity. This card will be honored as an admission to the Broadway any time during "commencement week."
> Most sincerely, (Manager.)

The above seems a friendly and hearty good will gesture on the part of a theatre and we're passing it along right now so as to have it reach other members in time for graduation season. Thanks to Walter Morris for the reminder.

WE HEAR THAT LONG WHISKERS WERE BIG HELP TO M. SHATHIN

The whisker angle of "Trader Horn" proved a most effective means of exploiting that picture, advises Morris Frantz, when writing of the activities of M. Shathin, of the M-G-M Tokyo office.

Note the top portion of the accompanying photo which shows Mr. Shathin and the most bewhiskered gentleman in all Japan posing for the camera. The latter is receiving his award. We're asking you if the old fellow wouldn't give the Smith Brothers some tough competition!

Next, take a squint at the championship moustache in the center portion. The hirsute gentlemen who belongs to the longest moustachio in the world is none other than the "Father of Aviation" in Japan. He is so impressed with the beauty of this moustache that he has on various occasions promoted competitive events among long-moustached men of many countries.

No doubt about whiskers going big and growing big over in Japan. Anyway, the stunt was good for stories almost every day over the period of a month and intermittently thereafter until release of the picture. Our thanks to Frantz, of David Blum's office in New York City, for sending us this interesting material.

HENDRICK TIED-UP WITH PHOTOGRAPHER ON IDENTITY STUNT

A clever identity gag was recently pulled off on "Crowd Roars" by Bill Hendrick, manager of the Warner Theatre in Frederick, Md. He rounded up some prominent people in his community and had them pose for photos wearing helmet and goggles worn by Cagney, which partially obscured their features. Guest tickets were offered to those who correctly identify the photos. Cost was negligible for reason that the local photographer stood expense of photos in exchange for credit in newspaper and theatre.

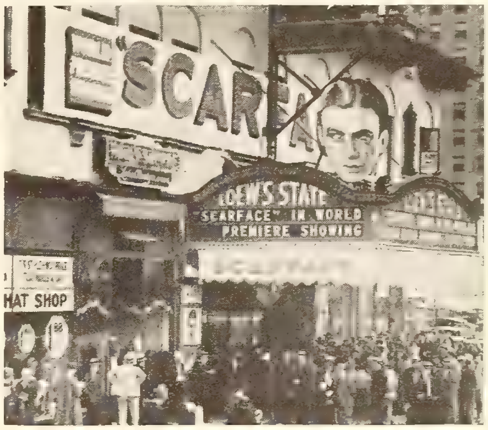
TOUPS ENGINEERED WORLD PREMIERE OF NEW GANGSTER FILM

Special stunts, several newspaper tie-ups and other effective advertising and exploitation featured the World Premiere campaign made on "Scarface" by Rodney Toups, manager of Loew's State Theatre, New Orleans, La.

Special stunts included a special showing for the Chief of Police and Chief of the local Detective Bureau, following which endorsements were given the picture; routing of a truck mounted with 24-sheets about city for three days; arrangements made to have the film delivered to theatre by armored truck and police escort, and a corking tie-up with the local Plymouth auto dealer, who, in return for lobby display of car, staged a big parade led by a sound truck. The auto dealer also mentioned picture in all newspaper advertising and gave gratis announcements over three radio stations.

Newspaper tie-ups included classified gags with three papers, grocery tie-up with two and a contest for a best essay in another. An award of 50 guest tickets was given for the best answer to the question, "What are we to do with gangsters." The papers generously co-operated with advance stories on the World Premiere. Display advertising began with a small ad on the day preceding opening and pyramided to smash.



Outside advertising included distribution of 10,000 tabloids by special boys house to house and on R. R. trains; distribution of 2,000 "Wanted" posters; distribution of 10,000 packs of matches from drug and cigar stores; four window displays featuring books; special process cards in hotels, merchant windows and prominent locations in business section; extra billing of one, three and six sheets; enlarged Postal telegrams, and special advance displays in lobby two weeks prior to opening.

The accompanying illustration will convey a fair idea of how the theatre front looked for the occasion. Both front and sides were covered with especially built compo board with brilliant red background with large photos of Scarface at top. White cutout letters were used for title of picture and all copy. Twenty-four sheet cutout heads of Scarface were placed at either corner on top of marquee. A fifty by ten foot banner was strung across the front, put up at the rate of two sections a day. Cutouts, a board of sawed-off shotguns and handcuffs, 15 blown-up reviews and congratulatory telegrams decorated the lobby.

Toups certainly put over a well diversified campaign and from what we hear obtained most satisfactory returns as the results of his efforts.

JEFFREY PROMOTED BIG DOG AND DOLL STUNT IN FLORIDA

Just as George B. Jeffrey observes, tear sheets of Miami newspaper tell the whole story of a big Doll and Dog Contest waged recently as the result of a tie-up between theatre and publisher. George manages the Stanley, a Publix house down at West Palm Beach, and now that the northern visitors have promoted carfare to their home towns and things have quieted down, we may expect a bit of news now and then from that neck of the country.

To get back to the Big Doll and Dog stunt, we can report that numerous and sundry youngsters, dogs and dolls took part in the event and that motion pictures were taken of the winners. A party was staged at the theatre and all winners were awarded free tickets to the show. By virtue of the tie-up the paper plugged the event with stories and photos for several days prior to opening. Owners of smallest dogs, largest dogs, smartest dogs, prettiest dolls, etc., vied for honors.

Jeffrey had two excellent days as the result of his show and is passing the tip along as a reminder for some other showman in this outfit to take a whack at the same kind of stunt. The newspaper will, of course, figure their end of the deal on reader interest on account of the many local residents entered in the event.

SOBLER ON THE JOB WHEN STAR STOPPED OFF IN WINDY CITY

Right on the job when James Cagney passed through Chicago en route to New York City, Al Sobler, in charge of advertising and exploitation for Warner theatres in Chicago territory, promoted a snappy auto speedster for exclusive use of the star while in town. The tie-up also included the sending out by the auto manufacturer of 100,000 circulars of a photograph of Cagney and car. "Crowd Roars" was the inspiration.

POSTER ART FOR THE THEATRE!

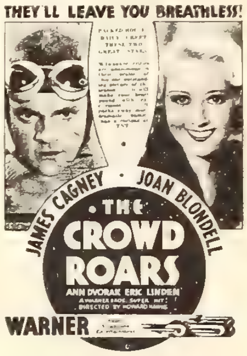
Well, here we are back on the Poster Art series which we so reluctantly had to get away from for a while. But we'll try our darndest to keep it going without interruption from now on.

James B. Watson is the artist who contributed this poster. Isn't it attractive? We thought so and now we pass it along for your opinion or use. You will find it easy and clear to trace on your Balloptican projector and the likeness of Joan Bennett is unusually good.

Watson is the art man for the Capitol theatre in Pottsville, Pa., and further examples of his fine work will appear frequently during the series. We are of the opinion that his work will bear watching and may be found good for others who want to inject new life into their own art work.

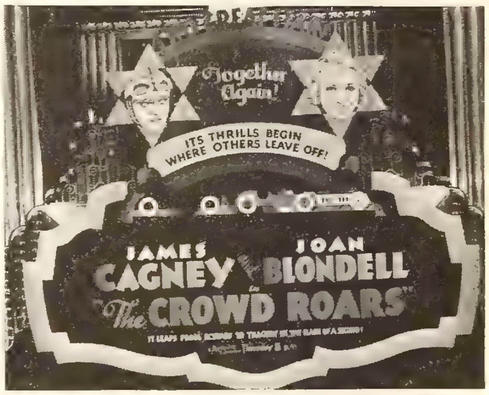
BEN KATZ AND CREW WAGED BIG CAMPAIGN FOR CAGNEY PICTURE

Ben Katz, Warner Theatre advertising manager in Milwaukee who has been putting over noteworthy work over a considerable period, is given credit for a Wow of a campaign made recently on "Crowd Roars," in which promotional stunts played an important part



One of the heavy items in Ben's campaign was distribution of 100,000 fly sheets from a local newspaper, one side plugging the picture and the other the publication. Half were distributed by the newsboys and half by the theatre. Another large item was distribution of 10,000 Postal Telegraph messages, signed by Cagney and Blondell and placed in all downtown office buildings, restaurants and hotels.

He also sold the Walgren drug stores on the idea of featuring a Cagney and Blondell 2 Star Feature Steak Sandwich.



Two newspaper stunts also came in for their share of favorable comment. One was a picture caption gag run over a period of four days which gave a corking opportunity to show different scenes from the picture each day and to work in stories from the merchandising plan. The other was a classified ad gag in Milwaukee's largest German paper.

Additional trade builders used by Katz included 3,000 special gag cards sent out on house mailing list; 24-sheets in best available spots in county; tie-ups in 22 downtown windows; display of trophies won by local team of auto racing drivers in large department store; silk ribbons worn by house ushers in all Warner Milwaukee theatres one week prior to opening; a five day teaser ad campaign in advance of regular display newspaper advertising; special art and stories in all papers; 6 advance radio announcements; special lobby displays and front; special copy trailer in addition to regular talking trailer; special sound copy trailer in nine Warner neighborhood houses one week in advance; and a gala Hollywood premiere with floodlights, radio hook-ups, orchestra and all the other side dishes.

The accompanying illustrations show one of the lobby displays fashioned by the staff and an example of newspaper advertising used in the above campaign.

SHEPHERD'S EGG HUNTING RALLY WAS THE TALK OF MIAMI, FLA.

Hard Work Featured All His Efforts and Reflected in the Amount of Business and Publicity Gained by Theatre!

Same Idea Can Be Used For Treasure Hunt or Similar Business-Building Ideas At Any Time of the Year!

We are well aware of the fact that Easter, Egg hunts and Bunny gags are past as far as this year is concerned, but we are faced with a peculiar situation. We are supposed to pass along ideas in every avenue of showselling, yet, we cannot tell how a thing has been successfully handled until it is over and then when it is over the season has past and we can only tell you how it was done with the definite thought in mind that the smart showmen of today keep a good file of such material when the season rolls around again in another 12-months.

All of which leads us up to this point where we want to tell you about one of the best Easter parties we've ever had the pleasure of watching personally in many a year. In fact, we can't recall when as much enthusiasm, publicity and local good will was corralled by a single neighborhood theatre in many moons. But since this one bears telling, here goes:

Advance Publicity!

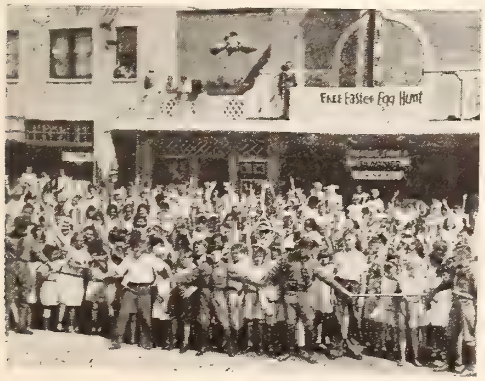
The theatre is the Biltmore Theatre in Miami, Fla., and the manager is Sonny Shepherd (pictured elsewhere on this page). "Sonny" is one of those fellows who can get back of an idea and see it through on his enthusiasm alone. And he has plenty of that. But his pet hobby, and a profitable hobby it's turned out to be for the Biltmore Theatre, is a Mickey Mouse Club and anything else that ties in with the youngsters.

For example, he has a Mickey Mouse orchestra of 15 pieces which has been working with him for over a year. They meet twice a week and rehearse and then play at the regular Saturday meetings of the Club on the stage of the Biltmore every week. In addition, they play outside engagement which "Sonny" arranged for them as they are advertised as the Biltmore Theatre Mickey Mouse Orchestra.

Besides this orchestra he also has a talented group of kiddies who are apparently destined for great futures on the stage. Some of those youngsters perform like seasoned troupers and lend no end of entertainment to the weekly gathering of the Club. But we'll tell you more about those entertainers later on in this story.

One of the most pleasant memories of our trip to Florida this past winter was the time we spent with Sonny Shepherd, live-wire manager of the Wolfson-Meyer Biltmore Theatre in that city. Aside from making our stay mighty enjoyable, Sonny gave us several opportunities of observing, first hand, how a small theatre can be made profitable via hard work and constant plugging. Here is a showman who never relaxes in his effort to attract attention to the theatre by way of newspaper stories and exploitation.



First of all, we want to convince you that the newspapers of Miami are hard-boiled when it comes to any free space or stories about the theatres and their attractions. So when "Sonny" broke the front page of the leading paper by crashing into Arthur Brisbane's exclusive column you can take it from us that "that's sumpin'." He also managed to get several prominent readers spotted during the week in the two papers and succeeded in working up quite a lot of interest in his Saturday morning Easter Egg Hunt and party.

Hiding the Eggs!

We happened to spend the previous evening with "Sonny" and so we know that he was mighty anxious to get busy late at night and bury the eggs so as to make the kiddies get a lot of fun out of finding them. But the weather looked threatening and so he put it off until 5 o'clock the morning of the hunt. How many other managers would personally get behind a gag of this sort and get up at that ungodly hour to bury 300 hard-boiled eggs. Understand, previous to the burying process they had to be colored in all the latest and flashiest colors.

Then there were the prize-winning eggs. A golden egg for first prize and a silver for second. To which you can also add 12 white eggs stamped with the Biltmore rubber stamp and good for a free admission to the lucky kids who found them.

Just glance at the pictures on this page and then answer the question yourself. Picture a little tot with a flock of eggs she had found during the first half hour of the hunt.

Try to count that small portion of the participating youngsters in front of the theatre where "Sonny," via a loudspeaker, stood upon the top of the marquee and gave them their instructions. We judged that close to 1,500 kiddies gathered in front of the Biltmore on the morning of the hunt.

Another picture shows just a small portion of them scattered about one of the fields close by the theatre where the eggs were concealed. It sure was a sight for tired eyes to watch those kiddies start off on the run to look for those eggs. And what a sight every time they found one. It was worth all the time, trouble and aggravation spent on working up a stunt of this sort, and that's about all that must of sustained this enthuisastic manager.

Egg Rolling Contest, Too!

The egg hunt lasted for the better part of 45 minutes and then the kids lined up on either side of the street to watch 20-odd boys attempt to push raw eggs a hundred feet with their noses. The roars of laughter which greeted the breaking of the shells by the over-ambitious boys proved that the spectators were getting a great kick out of the whole proceeding.

Incidentally, while this last event was going on some of the kids were bargaining for exchange of eggs. The lucky ones who found anywhere from two to ten eggs were willing to listen to any fair proposition for the sale of some of their findings. Ditto for the kids who found more than one white (free admission) egg. It was a grand time all around.

Great Stage Show!

After much hard work on the part of the staff, "Sonny" finally managed to get all the kids into the house and seated. Then the film show got under way, and if you've never listened to hundreds of kids watching a western picture then you have been more than kind to your ears. Mine still ache from the hell-raising which followed each thrilling episode of a Maynard offering. But

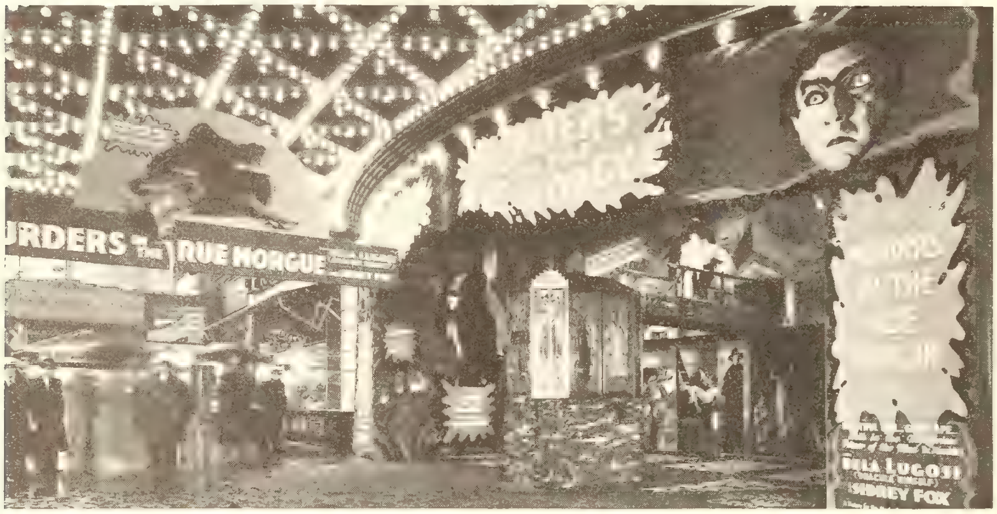
A STRIKING LOBBY DISPLAY ON "RUE MORGUE"



The Mayfair Theatre, RKO first-run stand in New York City, had an attractive lobby display for "Murders in Rue Morgue." Back of the box office a display made to resemble a gable window in the upper story of a house showed a giant ape emerging with a girl in its arms. A number of large, striking cut-outs were also placed at various spots at sides and rear on front lobby and under inside ends of the brilliantly illuminated marquee.

Gwinn a Partner

Cecil Gwinn, manager of the Fox Theatre, Centralia, Wash., becomes a partner in a business deal recently engineered by himself and A. C. St. John, president of the St. John Investment Co. of Chehalis, Wash. This corporation and Gwinn have purchased all the stock of the Twin City Theatres, Inc., and in turn the St. John Investment Co. has purchased the Fox Theatre at Centralia. Gwinn will continue as business manager for Twin City theatres at both Chehalis and Centralia. Local management remains as at present.

BIG COMPLIMENTARY PASS USED ON FILM BY SHOWMAN WITTE

A pink-colored complimentary pass measuring about two feet in length by eighteen inches wide blew in through the mails from Cincinnati a short time ago. It was issued by the Ufa-Taft Theatre in connection with "Freaks" and a portion of the copy stated that it was "a big pass for a big show." It bore the signature of F. M. Witte, manager of the house.

We believe this is the first time the Club has received a contribution from Witte and hope that he will favor this organization with other proof of his activities. A pass such as described above must have been something in the way of a sensation.

LOCAL BOY MAKES GOOD

Here is a case where a local boy actually did make good a chance to gain footlight fame through owning a face that resembled Joe E. Brown's.

M. L. Hart, manager of the Belle Theatre, Belle Fourche, S. D., when searching around for material to exploit "Local Boy Makes Good," discovered this so-called Joe Brown double in a local high school and persuaded him to appear on the stage of his theatre at all performances. Herewith is a reproduction of a newspaper ad used for the occasion. The young fellow made an interesting added attraction and business was excellent.

KLINGLER RECENTLY CELEBRATED NINTH ANNIVERSARY WEEK

Ninth Anniversary Week was celebrated a short time ago by Paul O. Klingler, manager of the Rialto Theatre, Lewistown, Pa., and we note that he got out a very attractive program in honor of the occasion.

The cover was made from black photo mount stock with front cover cut diagonally to show a portion of an orange colored insert. The name of the theatre on front and other copy was printed in silver. The back cover carried four ads from local merchants. The first page of the insert was blank except for two lines of copy in the lower right hand corner which read: "It's Our Birthday. . . . . Your Party."

Just a line or two concerning the program, which consisted of a news weekly; a Paramount comedy; a Paramount act; the Rialto Grand Organ; a special anniversary stage feature which included the "High Hatters," a Jap balancing act and a juggling act, and the feature presentation. The foregoing was run on Monday and Tuesday and a change was then made for the balance of the week.

We're glad to hear from Klingler again and think that he got out a most attractive looking special program. We also note that he used a striking newspaper display ad for an opening gun on "Shanghai Express," consisting of two large mats of Dietrich and Brook and just enough copy to be easily digested. Continue the good work, Paul, and don't forget to keep in touch with us.

SHEPHERD'S BIG EGG-HUNT RALLY!

to the kids it was just grrraaannnd.

After the feature was over the stage show started with a snappy overture by the Mickey Mouse Orchestra. Then "Sonny" introduced the Mistress of Ceremonies, a cute little miss who took the show in hand and made sure that every kiddie got a great big hand from the audience.

Toe dancers, sister teams, four-year-old tenors, one followed the other to the evident enjoyment of that mob of kids. Finally one of the favorites of the community was announced and did she get a reception? I'll say so, and she deserved it, too. There was a girl of about 10 who could sing a song like nobody's business. They couldn't get enough of her.

Good Time For All!

By the time we had to call it a day and make haste to get back to our hotel the house was filled to overflowing and, although we knew we were going to miss some fine stage talent, we had to tear away.

But one fact remained impressed upon our mind. Those kiddies certainly had the time of their young lives and seemed to be getting a great kick out of everything. No wonder, we thought, that this was the finest Mickey Mouse Club outfit we had ever attended. They had a manager working on the job who never knew what hours meant. He gave unstintingly of his time and health to build up something that must count for real dollars and cents at the box office.

We left Miami with one positive thought stamped on our minds. We had met one of the livest showmen in the south and found him to be one swell guy. Here's hoping that we get to Miami again next year.

BERGHOFFEN HELPED SALES WITH TIE-UPS AND LOBBY DISPLAYS

Lobby displays and tie-ups aided Arthur Berghoffen, manager of the Palace Theatre, Bergenfield, N. J., in the selling of "Lost Squadron" and "Fireman Save My Child."

For "Squadron" he had a fifteen foot flying 'plane on exhibition in the lobby and also arranged with a local airplane shop for the staging of a contest among Theatre Club members for the making of small, model 'planes. Results were excellent.

On "Fireman" he tied-up with the local fire department for an outdoor demonstration of fire fighting on opening day of picture. Another gag that went over big was a special showing for the entire department, all members attending in a body. Pamphlets containing police and fire signals were also widely distributed.

Berghoffen is a follower of exploitation activities set forth in this department and wants to thank his fellow showmen for the many valuable suggestions they have contributed. We are glad to hear from him again and hope he will continue to keep in close touch with Club headquarters.

ROUND TABLE BIOGRAPHIES

Lou S. Hart, director of publicity for the Academy of Music, New York City, crashed showbusiness through the Hollywood studios several years ago and has been in it ever since, even though he started out in life to become an electrical engineer.

Lou S. Hart

As he admits, he secured a job at the Fox studios as a means to an end, and the end at that time was to get an education at a university that had a good football team. His aspirations in the electrical line brought him in line with Movietone work at the studios, but he forsook all ideas of becoming an engineer after working out with Charlie Carroll in Jersey City, N. J., in the publicity end. Sold on publicity after that experience, he decided that it was the line he wanted to follow and has been at it ever since.

He thoroughly enjoyed his four years' experience on the West Coast and while there was a member of the Fox Studio Basketball Team, playing with George O'Brien, Charles Farrell, Rex Bell and Max Gold. He tells us he's in showbusiness for keeps.

HANNAN ENGINEERED OUTSTANDING PIECE OF PROMOTION WORK

An outstanding piece of promotional work was done recently by Manager Hannan of the Merrick Theatre, Jamaica, L. I., N. Y., when some $600 worth of attractive articles of merchandise were distributed among patrons of his theatre.

House supply companies, art shops, flower markets, dress shops, beauty shops, drug stores, dentists, meat markets and various other merchants were tied in with the move and articles ranged in value from $5 trade checks to an electric refrigerator worth $169.50.

We can well imagine the interest kicked up down on the Island by the above stunt.

IT PAYS TO ADVERTISE!

This Showman Speaks From Wide Experience On a Subject With Which He Is Really Familiar!

By TED TODDY

Director of Advertising and Exploitation in Southern Division for Columbia Pictures

ADVERTISING IS TO THE THEATRE WHAT THE HEART BEAT IS TO THE BODY. Without the heart beat the body dies; without advertising the theatre becomes dormant. Although this fact may be applied to any type of business, especially is it true with the theatre since ADVERTISING IS THE PREDOMINATING FACTOR RULING THE SUCCESS OR FAILURE OF THE THEATRE.

By advertising is meant merely advising the public what entertainment the theatre has to sell, which is a new commodity with each change of program. Regardless of the value of the star's name or other merits of the picture, which might speak for themselves and lead the exhibitor to the mistaken idea that there is no need to advertise or exploit, how is the public to know these good points, unless the showman DOES place these points in the spotlight where they can be heard and seen. After all, it is simply a matter of compelling attention and you can't compel attention by being quiet. The best mouse trap maker paved a beaten path to his door only by advertising. Otherwise, how did so many people hear of his mouse trap?

Don't Whisper — Shout!

Entertainment advertising has always been on the shouting plane and it is interesting to see that other types of business have acknowledged the effectiveness of this method by employing it. However, modern times have changed the methods of advertising in respect to "truth" of product about which the shouting is being done. The fundamentals remain unchanged and it is these fundamentals every exhibitor should know and if he does not know, should make their acquaintance, at least.

The methods of employing advertising vary, according to the theatre and locality. Each picture is an article calling for a special procedure. What is candy for one is poison to another. This pertinent fact we will discuss more in detail a little further down the line.

Returning for a moment to the topic of "truth" in advertising. Today is the day of truthful advertising and the man who does not stick to this rule reaps the ravages of the whirlwind set in motion by a humbugged public. Once patrons are properly "fooled," all advertising in the world will not gain their faith. An exhibitor might cry "wolf" once or twice and his patrons might come, expecting to find the "wolf," but as the watcher of sheep, the third time, when the exhibitor might have a really fine production and sends out his call, his patrons turn a deaf ear, as did the woodmen in the forest. The exhibitor becomes prey to his own folly.

In the past such a method has been used often and although the practice has been curtailed to a degree where only a few of the old school remain, every now and then an exhibitor becomes desperate for a sensational punch and starts on his own war path. By nature of the article advertised, theatre advertising is necessarily more sensational than the inanimated commodity offered for sale over the counter. But let's watch our step that we don't trespass the border line of honest sensationalism, which can be construed as enthusiasm, and untruthful boisterousness which every time rings with a death knell hollowness.

Everything Counts!

There is one thing a theatre manager must understand and that is a theatre manager employs advertising from the very moment his theatre opens. Advertising and exploitation work hand in hand with good theatre management. Consider the first "Good morning,—How many tickets, please" —from the cashier in the box office, to the "How did you enjoy the show" from the usher. The response which these words bring from your patrons is, of course, a form of advertising.

Consider also the physical cleanliness of the theatre, the courteous assistance offered by a theatre staff, the arrangement of the screen menu. All of these are parts of the whole "selling" picture. No amount of advertising in the form of outside advertising will succeed if the theatre itself is not well managed. This is pure logic. Do we not shop at the stores in whose reputation we have faith?

The business of a theatre is not that of an educator, although it is acclaimed the greatest educational medium of the age, but emphatically a business of selling entertainment via the screen to as many people as possible at every showing of a picture. The theatre is in the same position as that of a prominent retail store. Whereas the retail store offers merchandise from its shelf, the theatre offers entertainment and differs only in the type of merchandise offered, which calls for a change in its method of advertising.

Different Methods Available!

Regarding the method of procedure, for instance, in assisting an exhibitor in advertising, the Advertising and Exploitation Department takes into consideration the local conditions in the town, which often times influence the procedure in advertising a certain production. Yet this influence is not often so decidedly pronounced that it calls for a right about face from the usual method. Whenever such a situation is contacted, however, it must be dealt with diplomatically.

Toddy, before making his present connection, was actively engaged in theatre work and for this reason is better qualified to discuss advertising and exploitation than one who lacks the background of theatre management. If YOU do not agree with his views you may give us your own slant. The matter is open for discussion by all members.

We might take for example the advertising of a picture from the "Sex" angle, whose campaign demands minute and careful planning. A production which lends itself to exploitation and advertising from a strong sex angle is too often distorted by managers on the theory that their box office will be enriched by this sordid, enticing appeal. Just because a production pertains to to the loves, life and experiences of a woman, it does not necessarily classify it as a lurid sex production. Many a theatre has ruined its reputation by misleading ballyhoos on the exposure of sex, which ballyhoos are untruthful and hence unwarranted. If they had kept their advertising on this same picture on a dignified plane, they would have fared to the contrary.

These are facts which we all know. Upon arising in the morning we use "Life Buoy" soap for our bath, clean our teeth with "Pepsodent," shave with a "Gillette," put on a "Van Heusen" shirt and "Society Brand" suit, breakfast on "Kellogg" cereal and "Maxwell House" coffee, smoke "Lucky Strike" and the first moment we feel weary drink a "Coca-Cola," and throughout the day similar well known brands of merchandise satisfy our desires.

Did you ever stop and think these so well known brands were unknown a comparatively short time ago. Yet today we unconsciously ask for them, so familiar are they to us. Why? We really don't crave these particular brands or really believe them so superior to other brands to warrant our exclusive use of them. Again, why? Simply because they are the effectively advertised brands and because of their advertising we feel familiar with them, as though they were our friends. These brands have made millions for their advertisers. Statistics will attest it has paid them to advertise. For the same obvious reason why we select these brands, patrons will select your theatre to attend.

For Business and Profits!

It pays to advertise because if properly used it earns profits, builds and boosts valuable good will and has been always a prominent factor for success.

As a simple illustration of the power of advertising, if you have read this story thus far you are now acquainted with the writer. The writer was unknown to you previous to your reading it and had not the article been written, you would have not become familiar with his name. So, again it pays to advertise. Advertising is merely placing your name and product for public attention in a manner which will draw and hold that attention with sufficient power to stimulate action. The writer hopes he has been able to do this in his message.

As the last thought for the caption of this article, "Why it Pays to Advertise," let me ask why should one ask such a question? Advertising was not the invention of man, if we will stop and think a minute. It sprang out of nature, particularly the shouting type. Why does the hen cackle every time she lays an egg? Does any one ever ask, "Why does it pay the hen to advertise?" Well, she, like distributors of goods, whether they be exhibitors or merchants, does not want to have a lot of "old" merchandise on hand. Besides that, she is doing her customers a favor, just as the exhibitor is favoring his patrons, by telling them she has something for their enjoyment, to satisfy their want.

Exhibitors—be smart as the hen—ADVERTISE!

A BI-CENTENNIAL CAMPAIGN

Matt Press, of Hattiesburg, Miss., Obtained Extensive Aid from School Executive

Matt Press, manager of the Saenger Theatre, Hattiesburg, Miss., grants that George Washington may have been first in the hearts of his countrymen, etc., but believes that he (Matt) is first when it comes to crashing through with a complete Bi-Centennial hook-up, chock full of costless ideas and productive of results. Here's what he did:

Two weeks in advance he consulted the superintendent of city schools and obtained endorsement for a wholesale celebration of the event. All principals were advised to hold Washington exercises on the morning of Feb. 22 at their respective schools at 8.30 A. M. for thirty minutes and then to march to the Central High School, where a parade was formed, consisting of the High School band, State Teachers band, Woodmen of the World band, 2,500 school children and other patriotic organizations. Each unit contributed its share of color and costumes for the occasion and the route of the parade covered the principal streets of the city on way to the Saenger Theatre.

Telephone Message

The Consolidated Schools of the county were approached over telephone in the following manner: (names of principals were secured from County Superintendent) "Mr. ——— suggested that since there would be no school on Feb. 22, I should call attention to the Washington celebration being held in Hattiesburg on that day. At the same time the thought occurred to me that it would be possible for the schools to earn a few dollars to be applied to any fund by selling tickets for our Centennial Show, which could be accomplished through students and faculty and a percentage of sales turned over to the fund, all Consolidated bus drivers to be guests of the theatre."

Washington having been an Episcopalian, the local church of that denomination announced the attraction from the pulpit and members of the Guild supported the move by selling tickets for the Centennial show.

All Clubs Contacted

Names of the heads of all clubs and civic organizations were also obtained and these executives were contacted over the telephone as follows: "Some time ago I was approached by a member of your organization relative to arranging a program to commemorate the Washington Bi-Centennial. I failed to take note of the member's name but recall that a few members of your organization were anxious to have a program of this kind arranged. Following the suggestion I have prepared the program and would consider it a great favor if mention of it is made at the next meeting."

The theatre lobby was appropriately decorated with a display board of the Bunker Hill monument, with cannons at bottom firing into display boards. At each report the flasher illuminated the boards and the day's attraction. This display was 12 feet high by ten feet wide.

Notice to Members:

PLEASE be sure to notify the Chairman of any change of address—THANK YOU.

In addition to radio announcements three times daily right up to playdate, a newspaper, somewhat antagonistic in the past, was sold on lending cooperation through the fact that the schools were arranging and conducting the show in its entirety. As a result a two-page co-op was promoted through a number of merchants by the advertising department of the paper. Attention of the readers was gained through questions concerning Washington in each ad, answers of same to be obtained by calling at each store. The theatre furnished 100 tickets for that day's show and the paper donated the $20 cash award. Each merchant had a window display for the occasion.

Some Parade!

Getting back to the parade, it's a shame that we can't reproduce some of the snap shots Press sent along but they're all too faint. However, we can see from the originals that the parade was made a veritable pageant by the colorful costumes worn by the many youngsters who took part. The ceremonies at the theatre consisted of a "Welcome" by the Mayor; a patriotic address by the Superintendent of Schools; another speech by the president of the chamber of commerce; other short talks concerning Alexander Hamilton and the wealth of educational entertainment to be found in the day's show, which consisted of the feature, "Alexander Hamilton"; "Washington, the Man and Capital"; a comedy, and a news weekly. The regular performance started at one o'clock.

General Cooperation

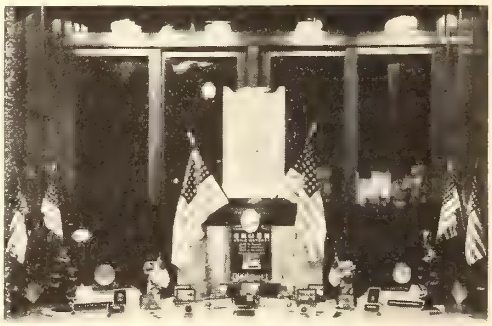
Newspaper tear sheets, snapshots and other data at hand all testify to the amount of interest kicked up by Press on the occasion of his Bi-Centennial celebration and the accompanying photo of a store window will convey an idea of how local merchants entered into the spirit of the affair. It is difficult to estimate in dollars and cents just what Press accomplished through the holding of this show, when good will gained from public and schools is taken into consideration. We will also venture the opinion that the newspaper, once somewhat antagonistic, is now on much better terms with the theatre management. Business at the theatre was excellent.



The Bi-Centennial will continue over a nine-month period, and Press' campaign can be adapted to most any one of the 40 holidays listed for celebration. If you cannot secure information through local sources you may do so by getting in touch with Bi-Centennial Headquarters, Washington Building, Washington, D. C. The group in charge will also supply you with mats and other material to help make your show a success.

Take a little time off at the first opportunity that presents itself, Bill, and give an account of yourself to the rest of the Club members. Let them know of any stunts you've been using to good results at the box office. We've had many a live tip from men down in your city and we're going to count upon you to help uphold the good work.

ELMER A. FIELD is the assistant manager of the Kenosha Theatre, Kenosha, Wis., a house managed by well known showman and Round Tabler, Floyd Morrow. Field is indeed fortunate in being under the tutelage of such an able theatre executive as Morrow and with the valuable coaching he is bound to receive should be stepping out for himself one of these days. We're glad to record Field's membership and with two representatives at the Kenosha this department ought not to suffer from lack of news from that neck of the country.

JOHN J. REVELS is located at Mt. Holly, N. J., where he manages the Fox Theatre for Atlantic Theatres, Inc. He is another new recruit for our large army of showmen and we're glad to add his name to the Club roster. John shows five features every week in his house and that ought to be enough to keep any fellow on the jump for selling ideas. We hope he will find time to let his fellow Club members know how he's handling his shows.

JOHN HEGGIE holds down both assistant manager's and treasurer's duties at the Capitol Theatre, Windsor, Canada, and we're glad to record that his application for membership in the Club has also been received. With the opportunities John has for getting the inside dope on what it takes to assume full responsibility for house management, it probably will not be long before we'll be mailing him a regulation certificate. In the meantime, we hope that both he and his boss will keep headquarters duly informed on what they are doing in the showbusiness line.

HENRY FOEHRKALB skippers the Woodriver Theatre, a Publix house in Woodriver, Ill., and he's another showman from the middle west in line for introduction to this vast army of showmen. Welcome to the gang, Henry, and now let's see what you can think up in the way of an effective showselling gag for us to pass along to your fellow Club members. Shoot along some dope on what you've been doing to bring in patrons. All the fellows will be interested.

WILLIAM S. BRISCOE is holding down the job of assistant manager of the New Southtown Theatre, Chicago, Ill., a house in charge of Manager A. B. Shaw. Briscoe has been with the Southtown for the past three years and not only does he assist Shaw but also acts as treasurer. His boss vouches for his qualifications as a thorough showman and we're glad to welcome him as a new member of this organization. It's been some little time since we've had news from the Southtown's neighborhood and we'll be glad to record what's doing out there.

W. M. GRIFFIN has been associated with the Gem and Jackson Theatres, Cairo, Ill., for the past six years and we now find him holding down the job of assistant to Manager H. B. McFailing. Griffin has filled numerous and sundry jobs in connection with his work with this outfit but now he's gone in for showbusiness in a serious way, and he thinks that belonging to this Club won't do him any harm. You're on the right track, Griffin, and we're sure that the show selling tips published in this department will aid any man in his climb up the ladder. Just as soon as you and your boss can find time to tell us what's going on at the Gem and Jackson, shoot along the information.

—Wear Your Club Pin! ! !—

WILLIAM J. McMAHON is the skipper of the Sayville Theatre, down in Sayville, Long Island, N. Y., and he's another clam digger to become a member of this big organization of go-getting theatre managers. The good old summer residents will soon begin their annual trek to this well known Island town and we presume Mack will be garnering his share of their earnings. Tell us what you have planned to get them out of their bungalows, Bill, for the other boys will be interested. Are the flatfish still running?

—Wear Your Club Pin! ! !—

L. T. MacWATTERS has charge of the New Essex Theatre down in Tappahannock, Va., and we're taking this opportunity to acknowledge his application for membership in this constantly-growing fraternal order. Welcome to the gang, Mack, and please see that you do your bit to keep the Club informed on what's going on in showbusiness down in your neck of the Virginias. What was that last gag you put over to the tune of increased box office receipts? Let the other Round Tablers in on it.

HARRY HERMAN is the assistant manager of the Meserole Theatre, a Randforce house over in the Greenpoint section of Brooklyn, N. Y., managed by Sidney Larschen. Harry is only 22 years old but has already acquired considerable experience in showbusiness by following the carnival and circus end of the game. That the business runs in the family is seen in the fact that his brother Joe manages the Parkside, another Randforce house. Under the able tutelage of Larschen, who not only is a showman of wide experience but can quote glibly from both Old and New Testaments, we look for rapid advancement on the part of Herman and most cordially welcome him as a new member of this Club.

—Wear Your Club Pin! ! !—

RONALD E. WARREN manages the Eagle Theatre over in Lubec, Maine, and a cordial Club welcome is also extended this new Round Tabler of the New England contingent. Maine showmen have always been well represented in this department and it is to be hoped that Warren will strive to uphold this reputation. Gather up some data on a few of those stunts you've used to boost the good old box office, Ronald, and send them in to headquarters so that we can pass the dope along to the rest of the gang. Aside from showbusiness for a moment, how's fishing up your way?

—Wear Your Club Pin! ! !—

W. M. NELSON is another assistant manager to join the ranks of the Round Table Club and he hails from Watsonville, Calif., where he helps H. V. Hamey with the management of the Pajaro Theatre, a house in the Harvey Amusement Company circuit. Nelson is 22 years of age and has been on his present job for one year, during which time he served as relief Projectionist and floor man. That was good experience and knowledge gained won a promotion to the post of assistant. He likes our section in the Herald and we hope it will further assist him in his climb up the ladder.

—Wear Your Club Pin! ! !—

ARTHUR C. STOCK is a new Round Tabler up in the Dominion of Canada and he manages the New Iroquois Theatre in Petrolia, Province of Ontario. We're glad to add his name to the ever-growing Club roster and will look forward to his contributions to this department. Many a good, live show selling tip has come from your section of the country, Arthur, so let's hope that you, too, will come through with some bang-up box-office stunts for your fellow Round Tablers. Shoot them along and we'll do the broadcasting.

—Wear Your Club Pin! ! !—

BEN BROSKIE is a Round Table representative over in Irvington, New Jersey, where he manages the Liberty Theatre on Springfield Avenue. He's another recently-elected Club member and we're glad to introduce him to the rest of this outfit. Unless we're very much mistaken, Ben will be shooting along some dope on how shows are sold in his community, so until then we'll sign off and wish him lots of luck.

—Wear Your Club Pin! ! !—

LOUIS V. COLLINS is located out in Metropolis, Ill., where he manages the Illinois and Pictureland Theatre, and we have a strong hunch that this new Round Tabler is going to hit a high mark as a contributor to this department. Along with his application for Club membership are a number of stunts which he and his brother, W. A. Collins, have used successfully out their way and we'll get the facts together at the first opportunity.

WABASH AVENUE

CHICAGO

Members of the Warner Club and their friends to the number of 800 made merry last week at a dance and celebration in the Warner building on South Wabash avenue. The entire fourth floor, decorated and in other ways converted into a ballroom, housed the club members and their guests for the gala evening with Roy Boomer of the Stratford theatre acting as master of ceremonies. To demonstrate further that the social life is not entirely vanished from the industry, the sixth floor of the Warner building is being fitted up with recreational facilities for employees. Ping pong tables have been installed and golf driving nets. A part of the floor is set aside and furnished as a rest room for women.

A midnight preview of "Congress Dances" was held at United Artists theatre last Friday.

STAGE ATTRACTIONS
FOR PICTURE THEATRES

NOVELTY

Dorothy Mackaill
New York Paramount

Dorothy, the sprightly and bonny lass, hit the heather in the Paramount to a thunder of applause. She is a great trouper. She dances, sings and does bits from her recent pictures. Since she left Ziegfeld Follies she has, as it were, reached her theatrical maturity and she knows how to entertain and does it well. Her recently acquired husband appeared on the stage in her act. We were unable to divine the reason.

Meroff's Band (35)
San Francisco Golden Gate

This organization of 35 members, headed by Benny Meroff, forms the entire stage bill. Every man can play at least three instruments and many of them can tap dance and do odd jobs of comedy. In the company are "Red" Pepper and "Mouse" Powell, patter and gag specialists, pulchritudinous Ann Roth and Mary Dunckley and Joy Finley, dance artists.

Sibylla Bowan
Baltimore Keith's

It's a cleverly arranged number of impersonations—Helen Wills on a tennis court, Gloria Swanson in a ballroom, Marlene Dietrich in "Blue Angel," Greta Garbo in "Anna Christie," and Beatrice Lillie singing "For I'm the Ka-ween." Miss Brown also presents a novelty song and dance in "Who Cares?" to the "Doll Dance" music, and sings "Falling in Love Again" in the "Blue Angel" episode.

Pablo
Milwaukee Wisconsin

Billed as the South American magician, Pablo opens with a trick in which he tears up a newspaper, folds the pieces, unfolds it all and reveals the paper again in one piece. He is particularly adept at sleight of hand tricks with cards and cigarets, producing either from the ether at will.

Africana
San Francisco Warfield

Earl Dancer's "Africana," with 30 members of the "Lucky Day" company, put on a lively revue. Mildred Washington, billed as "The Dancing Demon" from Washington, does a dazzling dance, Alma Travers sings the blues and Jimmie Miller offers specialties.

Marie MacQuarrie and Company
Baltimore Keith's

A harp, song and dance act, opening with the harpists playing "Cuban Love Song" as a girl sings offstage. A man comes on with a ukulele and sings "I'm Going Back to Dixie" and is joined by Helen Hewitt as they sing "What Could Be Sweeter Than You." This is followed by "Roses of Picardy," and finally the man does some soft shoe dancing while Miss Hewitt sings and the harpists play.

Four and a Half Arleys
Baltimore Hippodrome

These four men and one woman, one of the men a midget, gained good applause by novelty pole balancing with comedy on the side, drawing laughs by the midget. In the finals one man whirls on top of the pole held by another and whirling lights at sides.

Boston RKO Keith's Back to Vaudeville

New changes of policy in both RKO theatres in Boston are being inaugurated with the change of programs Friday. RKO Keith's again becomes the home of vaudeville with seven acts in addition to the feature film, news and a comedy. This theatre (its predecessor, the B. F. Keith theatre) was the first one in America to show vaudeville and the present theatre was built with elaborate accommodations for vaudeville artists. The vaudeville was discontinued about two years ago. The RKO Keith-Boston, to which vaudeville was transferred when it was discontinued at Keith's, will supplant vaudeville with stage presentations, making the second Boston theatre to give stage presentations in addition to its feature film. Except in a few instances, since the former change was made, the Keith-Boston has been making a better showing in the grosses of the two theatres.

Columbia System Experiments On Television Without Sound

Columbia Broadcasting System is engaged in a study of reception of its television station W2XAB, five nights a week, temporarily eliminating sound synchronization. Various types of pantomime programs are being continued in addition to special visual tests on color.

It is planned to continue the tests through the summer. William A. Schudt, Jr., television director, revealed that the company has maintained a seven-hour daily television broadcasting schedule for the past nine months, since it opened the television experimental station last July.

NIGHTINGALE OF THE AIR—LOUISE BAVE

Louise Bave, coloratura soprano, known as the "Nightingale of the Air" and one of the most gifted members of Major Edward Bowe's "Capitol" family, has been heard every Sunday evening over WEAF, New York, and a NBC network for a number of years. Miss Bave has been a featured radio star on some of the more important programs in the past and will be heard on a new series of programs in the fall. Incidentally, Miss Bave is said to be the only girl on the air at present who can reach G above high C. She has a range of three octaves.

SINGERS

Cliff Edwards
New York Paramount

It is difficult to think that this performer is the same talented artist that made the world sing with "Singing in the Rain," a joyful masterpiece that clings to one's recollection. Cliff Edwards is a "screen and radio star," but he doesn't glitter on the stage.

Brox Sisters (3)
Detroit Fox

A well-blended trio, audibly and visually. A blonde, a brunette and a redhead, they appear in crinoline garb and offer "An Evening in Caroline" and "Falling in Love Again," a Dietrich impression of "Dinah" and "Rain on the Roof."

Elmer Herling
Milwaukee Wisconsin

Here is a singer whose primary duty is to provide vocal accompaniments to dances by members of the chorus. He has a pleasing voice and offers any number of songs.

Miss Ethelind Terry
New York Palace

This musical comedy star has plenty of appeal and uses it with restraint. She sings appealingly and her piano accompanist—a man—knows her moods. She does popular stuff in a high-class way.

Lillian Shade
Cincinnati Albee

This comely miss has an appealing voice and knows how to use it to best advantage. Wears several changes of costume, all in good taste. The audience liked her.

Neill Miller
New York Paramount

This gentleman wears a tuxedo, is tall and sings over the microphone. It must be by contrast, to show how good his wife, Dorothy Mackaill, is. He has a static stare developed by singing over the air. He has no place on the stage.

Niles Marsh
Detroit Fox

This impersonator of feminine personalities has a voice that is at ease in either extreme of the register. As a gowned social light and again as a prima donna he draws goodly applause.

Betty Fraser
Milwaukee, Wisconsin

Betty Fraser is a neat appearing blonde blues singer who offers such numbers as "Music in My Fingers," "Was That the Human Thing to Do?" and "You're My Everything" in an appealing manner.

Hal Byrnes
San Antonio Plaza

A double musical novelty is offered by this Cowboy-yodler-composer from California. His songs are of the hill-billy type.

Crawford & Caskey

Milwaukee Wisconsin

This boy and girl entertain with a fine bit of fancy ballroom dancing and are also adept at soft-shoe shuffling. The girl handles herself well, doing some intricate steps on the top of her toes.

Cherry and June Preisser

Baltimore Hippodrome

Cherry and June Preisser put all they had in their novelty singing and dancing act, offering a little of acrobatic, adagio, singing and novelty dancing. They worked hard and encored with their Hot Dixie Special.

Candreva Brothers

Detroit, Michigan

This trumpet sextet demonstrates musical excellence throughout. One of their best numbers is a muted trumpet, military version of "When Day Is Done."

Four Flushers

Denver Denver

These four men put on an act that is just what the name implies. A lot of four-flushing, but good. Singing, chatter, dancing and burlesque slapstick and strong-man stuff.

Bernice Kettler

San Antonio Strand

This pretty piano accompanist is a skilled musician and can do solos in a most entertaining manner.

Paul Kirkland

Detroit, Michigan

His act has balance in more than one sense of the word. A double chair balance is one of his best bets, but even better is a bit of balancing comedy with a paper cone.

Living Jewelry

Denver Orpheum

A group of models dressed in white allover tights and used as ornaments for huge jewelry, such as hand mirror, back comb, etc. Two do an adagio and another couple, with splendid voices, sing a high-class act.

Johnny Bryant

Milwaukee, Wisconsin

Johnny's specialty is whistling and he is no slouch at it, either. He imitates bird calls to a nicety and carries himself in a manner which makes a hit with the ladies.

The Orantos (3)

Denver Orpheum

Three men in a strong man and balancing act. Best number is when two perform on a twenty-foot pole held on the shoulder of the third.

The Chachalots
Herculean Trio
Mavis and Ted
Olga and Lester
La Marr Brothers
Marion and Katharyne

Milwaukee Wisconsin

All pose as various groups of statues, in bronze and silver. Each of the groups comes to life to engage in gymnastics, tumblings and acrobatic dancing. Their work is unusually effective. Before the curtains close, all return to their pedestals and again become statues.

DANCERS

Natcha Nattova

Denver Denver

This act, called "Dance of the Winds," a solo number, gets over due to the unique prop used, a huge flower pot with flowers in same proportion, all built out of sheet iron and of such strength as to allow her to dance on the petals and leaves.

Lodova

New York Paramount

She was billed as "the exotic dancing beauty" and lived up to her flattering billing. A lovely thing of airy grace and shapely form who moved about like shadows in a dream. Did very well as the show caught.

Billy Farrell and Dad

New Orleans Orpheum

A fast stepping dance act mixed in is rapid-fire patter that gets over without any aid from the orchestra pit. The entertainment is based on a contest between Farrell and his father, who, he says, is in his seventies. Both members of the team move fast and their remarks are really funny. The high spot is when Dad is on his back doing a hard shoe routine against a set of boards while son does a handstand above him and repeats the maneuvers.

Von Grona's Dancers

New York Palace

This is a dull result of a very pretentious effort. There seems to be something tired about the performance. The 11 dancers do 12 minutes and are on about nine minutes too long.

Stadler Rose Trio

Oakland Paramount

They win the audience with their fine dancing and follow with a whirlwind number that might be described either as adagio dancing or acrobatic.

Rose Marie Carter

Milwaukee Wisconsin

This young lady is quite an unusual acrobatic and control dancer. She performs a split bending backwards with her head almost touching the floor and raises herself back to standing position.

Lou Lockett & Co.

Cincinnati Albee

Lockett, one man and two feminine hoofers do a series of tap, eccentric and toe dances in single, duo, triple and quartet numbers, to accompaniment by their own pianist. Special scenic effects are used. They sell their numbers to the audience without difficulty.

Emily Von Losen and Company

Baltimore Hippodrome

Fast-moving dancing act, starting with six of company doing a novelty whip-ribbon dance, then a single by Von Losen followed by pantomime sketch between three sailors and two girls, with girl going off with one sailor, the others going into tap routine followed by a single by Von Losen with a Russian single by a man with baby accordion, then adagio work by the man and two girls and full company in finale.

"Smiling" Jack Elliott

San Antonio State

Good personality plus eccentric footwork makes this young Texas M. C. a pleasing feature on any show with a stage-band.

Stanley Meehan

San Antonio State

A clever hoofer, he does some neat tap stepping which is fast and worthy of many encores.

Russell Markert Dancers (16)

Milwaukee, Wisconsin

These girls work together nicely. The highlight of their numbers is a chain dance with one leg of each of the girls fastened to the chain.

Fred Astaire

New York Paramount

Fred Astaire is certainly a showman who knows his stuff. He pervaded the whole show and was on the job every minute. He has a fine stage presence and a brilliant personality.

Fritz and Jean Hubert

New York Palace

These two, apparelled in multicolored dress suits, give an acrobatic drunk dance that gets plenty of laughs and well deserved applause. During this review Fritz rough-and-tumbled so well that he knocked himself unconscious on a piano that was behind the curtain waiting for the next act.

Maurice Colleano and Family (6)

New York Palace

The acrobatic dancing comedian with his handsome family gives a fine performance. The scene is in a restaurant with two tables at which the girls sit. Colleano, dressed as a gob, enters, does some fine dancing and gagging. The girls give well balanced, artistic acrobatic dances. Whole act very well received.

SINGERS

Grace Hays (3)

New York Palace

This lady, a star of musical comedy and radio, clicked with this audience. She has a fine stage personality, sings well without the "mike" and with it. She recites and gives an imitation of Pola Negri singing; in this she is just about perfect. She introduces Joe Lynn as her son and the one who devised her act. He gave a creditable performance over the mike. Mildred Brown at the piano also did well. An all around good piece of entertainment, with plenty of applause at the finish.

Yorke and Johnson

New Orleans Orpheum

A semi-concert style of act, beautifully lighted and dressed, playing before its own drop. Miss Yorke is in a red dress of the Medici period, while Miss Johnson affects green of the same style. The introduction is conventional, but the act is of a relatively high standard for this house. Miss Yorke's voice is pleasing; she uses it with precision and her thrilling gets a hand. Miss Johnson had a tendency to get off key on the high notes, but her numbers took. The finish, a version of how two night club singers would do "Caro Nome," lacks the punch intended.

Gilda Gray Plans Stage Tour

Gilda Gray plans to begin a vaudeville engagement at the completion of the film, "Minnie, the Moocher," in which she is being starred by Bennie Zediman for Paramount release.

SLICES OF MELLIN

By BOBBY MELLIN

Chicago

Joseph, Jr., the 16-year-old son of Joseph Parsons, the NBC's Jingle Joe, is already making a name for himself as a baseball player. He received an offer from the Pittsburgh Pirates, but his father wants him to finish his education and then if he still wishes, he may follow baseball—Jules C. Stein, president of Music Corporation of America, returned to Chicago after a six weeks' European tour during which time he visited the music centers of continental Europe—Gus Arnheim and his orchestra, who made a great hit in Chicago during the past winter broadcasting over WBBM from the Cafe Winter Garden, are scheduled to play a few weeks' engagement at the Netherlands Plaza Hotel in Cincinnati for MCA before opening the Dells, smart summer night club west of Evanston, Ill. Arnheim's band will be heard over WLW Cincinnati.

Word comes from Hollywood that Ted Fiorito, Chicago's famous song writer and orchestra leader, is making a decided hit at the Frolics, smart night club patronized by the movie stars. Ted and his orchestra are heard nightly over the Don Lee chain of Pacific coast stations.

Black-haired, brown-eyed Irene Taylor, lovely NBC star who has broken all Leap Year records by receiving 34 proposals of marriage during the first three months of this year of Spinster's delight, has always been able to sing. She has never taken a music lesson. Irene is the daughter of a former judge of the supreme court of St. Louis and began her professional career at the age of nine years. Before coming to radio she worked with Coon-Sanders, with Paul Ash, and as a prima donna in productions. As becomes a former stage star, Miss Taylor is superstitious, lacking a dressing room, she objects to anyone whistling in the studio corridors before one of her broadcasts, or sitting on one of the sound effect department trunks. Her hobby (which may explain a few of the proposals) is cooking, and she is noted for the chili con carne she prepares in her kitchenette. She is also fond of swimming, riding horse, golf and music publishers, and her favorite orchestra leader is Charlie Agnew.

REVIEWS OF ACTS

COMEDY

Senator Murphy

New York Hippodrome

This man gives an up-to-date monologue and is timely to the minute. He has a fine voice, is very humorous and is well received.

Milton Berle

New York Palace

The right man in the right place, he carried the show right up front and dropped it in the laps of the audience. He's never short of a gag and has enough new ones to make them all seem original. He is a fine master of ceremonies and keeps them interested. Has an intimate way with the audience that is liked.

Roscoe (Fatty) Arbuckle

Baltimore Keith's

A riot of laughter and fun, with Addie McPhail of the film comedies assisting, as well as a "plant" in the audience. Arbuckle sings "Something to Be Thankful For," and then dances to "Narcissus" with a comedy fall. The act has been shortened since it was produced in Newark, and the tightening was effective, judging from the reception.

Charles Withers and Withers' Opry

Baltimore Hippodrome

This was presented on full stage and laughs were strong and numerous. Withers and his company put on a burlesque of the old small-time opera house methods. His novelty inventions for getting various stage effects also won favor. Altogether a very funny act with many novelty comic surprises.

Jack Benny

New York Paramount

Jack is billed as a "famous stage comedian" and he deserves the title plenty. He has a wonderful and appealing personality. His gags avoided offense. His stories are new and his smiles are eloquent and winning. Benny shared top honors with Dorothy Mackaill.

Lee, Port & Dotty

Milwaukee Wisconsin

The two male members of this trio are plenty funny with the shorter of the two sporting a rubber face which is good for plenty of laughs. The young lady is not hard to look at, dances with one of the boys in an able manner and sings a bit. The three present an act which has no end of nonsense offered in a fairly original manner.

Charles Ahearn and His Millionaires

New Orleans Orpheum

A combination of oldtime burlesque and the circus, this tramp act opens with a flourish that makes one think of flash and grand costumes, only to reveal later an incongruous picture of badly dressed giants and dwarfs as the scrim rises. Ahearn, clowning sometimes by himself, sometimes with his dwarfs or his giants, does everything from squirting water from a trick music stand to playing with balloons and then distributing them to the children in the audience. A fast stepper, unidentified, holds two solo spots and draws a heavy hand. But the act is largely comedy, getting its biggest laughs from the style parade and its burlesque musical instruments.

PLAYLETS

Al Jolson

San Francisco Fox

Al Jolson, assisted by exotic Raquel Torres, and his own most capable company, offers a tabloid version of "Wonder Bar." The show lasts a full hour, with Al singing, dancing and telling stories much of the time. The revue is thunderously received, this entertainer understanding the art of getting applause. Al appears in whiteface.

Benny Rubin and Jack Haley

Cincinnati Albee

These screen stars headline the bill in a blackout "revue" running 36 minutes and taking the place of three regular acts. Assisted by a capable company, they project an offering of foolishness of every description. Rubin features his "murdered" English which is his stock in trade on the screen. Haley indulges in smart repartee and wisecracks both singly and in connection with Rubin. He also does a dance number with Rubin and alone. Rubin follows with a single dance. The two men and two girls in company are capable feeders for the comedy of the featured team. Both Rubin and Haley surprise the audience by playing trombone and cornet respectively. The act went over big.

Franklin Orders Vaudeville Added in RKO Coast Houses

The recent visit of Harold B. Franklin, chief of the RKO theatre circuit, to the Coast, has resulted in additions to stage bills at the Coast houses. Top vaudeville has been moved from the Hill Street, Los Angeles, and from the Golden Gate to the Orpheum in San Francisco. Seattle, Tacoma and Portland have all increased vaudeville days.

The circuit home office is searching for local tryout houses in New York. It is seen as a return to the old-time methods of vaudeville talent acquisition. The forthcoming opportunity revues will play a major part in the new move.

Newman Is Booking Names to Improve Business in Seattle

Frank Newman has booked a number of special stage attractions at the Seattle first-run houses of Fox West Coast Theatres, as an initial step in raising the return.

Among those billed at the Fifth Avenue and Coliseum are Thurston, the magician; Alla Axiom, mentalist, Ted Lewis and his band. Newman is also negotiating with Al Jolson, Eddie Cantor and other "names" for appearances in Seattle and Portland.

OVERTURES

LOU SCHRADER (Baltimore Hippodrome) as guest conductor offered his novelty overture, "Grand Larceny," in which he showed that many of the popular song hits are taken almost bodily from famous classics. Schrader received the baton from Benjamin Klasmer, house conductor. Then followed an announcement on the screen in rhyme and explaining as the overture progressed what songs were being played and then what they were taken from. As examples there were played "Broadway Rose," then a selection from "Faust," "I'm Always Chasing Rainbows," supposed to be from Chopin's "Fantasy Impromptu"; "Avalon," presumably from "La Tosca," of Puccini; "Marcheta," supposed to be from "Merry Wives of Windsor," of Nicolai. Then he showed how "Yes, We Have No Bananas" was supposed to come from four songs—Handel's "Messiah," "My Bonnie," "I Dreamt I Dwelt in Marble Halls," "'Twas An Old-Fashioned Garden," "The Hallelujah Chorus" and then "My Bonnie Lies Over the Ocean."

FRED SCHMITT (Denver Denver) orchestra can always be depended upon to make his overtures both timely and interesting, and those are the two big reasons the Denver has such a large number of regulars in the audience every week. For Mother's Day week his musicians played three "Mother" selections, such as "Silver Threads Among the Gold" and "Mother Macree." Instead of the usual curtain, a scrim was used, and after the selections by the orchestra a young woman was revealed behind the drop. She sang a tribute to mother, a part being a verse about the letters in the word "mother," each letter being thrown on the scrim as the line was being sung. Then a little girl in the center offered her bit. A young man on the opposite side as a tableau appeared in the middle of the stage showing a mother in her favorite rocking chair. At the end all the figures were lighted.

EDUARD WERNER (Detroit Michigan), quietly elegant as usual, introduced with mingled strains from several river pieces, his arrangement titled, "Romantic Rivers." The medley included "Swanee River," "Roll On, Mississippi," "Blue Danube," "By the River Saint Marie," "Volga Boat Song" and "Old Man River." Praiseworthy execution brought him hearty applause.

HERSCHEL LEIB (Detroit Fox) offered a popular diversion in "Hit Parade." Featured in the medley was a trumpet solo of "Marta" by Ralph (Mex) Mendez, embellished by castanet touches. "Paradise," its theme introduced by a violin ensemble, was another outstanding number. A hectic rag of "This Is the Missus" closed the program. Hearty applause echoed the final crashing notes.

UP AND DOWN THE ALLEY

HELLO EVERYBODY

Ed McCally, Philadelphia representative of Witmark's and Remick's, was in town one day last week, just before leaving for his twenty-sixth season at Atlantic City, in the interests of these two music outfits. . . . Believe it or not (apologies to Rip.) "Mac" has lost 65 pounds and looks like a young boy. . . . According to "Mac," Milton Charles has signed another year contract as organist at Warners' Mastbaum theatre, Philadelphia. . . . That makes Charles one of the few organists in the United States holding a year's contract. . . .

Danny Parker tells me that Harry Richman liked the idea of community singing in theatres so well that he has gone and made a series of short pictures, independently, with this idea in mind. . . . They are to be released soon and will be booked in houses without organists. . . . Ted Crawford, organist at the Publix Orpheum, Phoenix, Ariz., writes that there is plenty musical activity in and around that city. . . . Out of the four large theatres, three have organists. . . . Besides Ted . . . Harvey Krause is at the Rialto and Walter Danziger at the Fox. . . . Alberti, former musical director at the Palace, Dallas, is now installed in the Fox, Phoenix, and is doing great. . . . Frank Lanterman, formerly of the Fox theatre, Los Angeles, has assumed the post of organist at Warners' Western, L. A., succeeding Edna Lyman, who had held the post for several weeks. . . . Dave Schooler, formerly of vaudeville and master of ceremonies at the Capitol for two years, is now starring as "proprietor" of Dave Schooler's Music Shop, a program heard over NBC networks each Sunday at 6:30 (E. S. T.) . . .

Gomez and Wynona, sensational dance team, featured in the long run of Billy Rose's "Crazy Quilt," are featured this week at the Roxy. . . . They say that songs in pictures are dead . . . well, according to that, "Long Live the King," . . . because Feist has two numbers—"Paradise" and "Tell Me Why You Smile, Mona Lisa—" that are both hits . . . and both from pictures. . . . Wayne King, popular "ork" leader, has made his first Victor recording and it is heralded as another artistic triumph for the famous "Waltz King." . . . Wayne first learned of his vocal qualifications while recording a series of records at Camden. . . . Officials of the Victor Company induced him to sing a chorus of "Deep in Your Eyes," and later declared that he had a good singing voice for radio and recording. . . . You'll probably be hearing him singing on his next broadcast. . . .

Multiple Vacuum Action Pipe Organ Patent Given

A patent has just been granted to E. D. Ponder, Cincinnati, covering a "multiple vacuum action pipe organ."

The inventor claims a much wider range of possibilities for the new instrument than heretofore available, mentioning in particular added tone colorings and the ability of the player to carry, two, three, four, five, six or seven notes in harmony in chromatics in only one set of pipes, or the entire organ, as he wishes. Some parts now used in organ construction will be eliminated as unnecessary in the new organ and the use of the multiple vacuum action will permit building the instrument much smaller, thus conserving valuable space in the theatre, he said.

ORGAN SOLOS

TED CRAWFORD (Phoenix Orpheum) presented a new angle, in this week's organ solo, to an idea as old as the hills, but received applause on it that lasted clear into the feature picture. The solo was titled "A Cook's Tour in Song," and opened with a parody on "Just a Gigolo."

An oral explanation by Crawford after the opening parody told of hearing the aforementioned tune everywhere so he decided to take them on a world tour. But as the boat left the dock, the band struck up "Gigolo," in march time—and so on—in every country the same tune, until despairingly they turned toward home. The closing line was: "But why travel to Rome—you can hear the same thing at home, and that completes the story."

Crawford's success lies in the fact that every solo he presents has a definite reason and continuity—not just one slide after another.

JOHN HAMMOND (Brooklyn Strand) called his song-fest "Musical Flirtations," and cleverly compiled the titles of songs to form the continuity. Songs offered for the audience to sing were: "Can't We Talk It Over," "Too Many Tears," "All of Me," "Where the Lilies of the Valley Grow," and a final chorus of "Auf Weidersehn, My Dear." Mr. Hammond is extremely popular at this theatre and his solos are always a great source of pleasure to the audiences.

LEW BETTERLY (Detroit RKO Downtown) chug-chugged through a program entitled "Spring Auto Suggestions." With his introductory notes a large "mike" was flashed on the screen while Lew addressed the audience over his own "mike," a device that proved effective in catching and holding attention. Betterly's program consisted of "Was That the Human Thing to Do?", "Snuggled on Your Shoulder," "Dream Sweetheart," "Somebody Loves You" and a tongue twister.

JACK MARTIN (Milwaukee Wisconsin) offers "Tune Types from the Old Family Album." Selections played include "Another Cup of Coffee and Another Piece of Pie," "That Little Boy of Mine," "An Evening in Caroline," and "Strangers." A musical prologue introduces various members of the family album with their pictures flashed on the screen.

ARTHUR GUTOW (Detroit Michigan) introduced his program, "Singing As You Like It," with the strains of "Bye, Bye Blues." The opening lyric was "Dream Sweetheart," followed by bits of "Paradise," for the most part whistled. A string of popular song titles served as a lyric for "Lovin' You the Way I Do." "Auf Wiedersehn" closed the program. Gutow's style is characterized by a sprightly swing between fullness and moderation.

WHAT DOES YOUR PUBLIC KNOW ABOUT RAW FILM?

NOTHING, perhaps. Yet, whether they're aware of it or not, people are profoundly influenced by the photographic quality which that film gives or does not give them on the screen. It may mean all the difference between a picture that goes its quiet, unprofitable way and one that becomes the talk of the town.

There's no need, these days, to run the risk of sacrificing photographic quality. Eastman Gray-backed Super-sensitive Negative, with its unmatched qualities and its never-failing uniformity, costs no more than other films, yet it helps substantially to head the picture for success. Wise the cameraman who uses it...lucky the exhibitor who runs prints made from it!

According to a Rialto audience, the number got over great. Running time, 7 minutes.

"Oh, How I Hate To Get Up in the Morning"

(Paramount)

Dave Fleischer has a new way of introducing his screen songs. Two radio personalities lead off with the song, which is followed by cartoon scenes of camping life. Betty Boop comes in for a shot in the mess hall and she guides the bouncing ball for a song. The short ends with the radio boys finishing the tune. According to a Rialto audience, the number got over great. Running time, 7 minutes.

DISCOVERING THE EXHIBITOR!

FROM many and varied positions and places in the industry we are getting these days repeated evidences of a new awareness on the part of the "industry," meaning Broadway and home offices, that there is a motion picture exhibitor and that he has problems. "Arbitration" has suddenly taken on a new meaning, in the discussions of executives of distribution. "Protection" is beginning to be talked of as something to be bought and paid for instead of as a favor to favored customers. The dictatorial inflection is not so evident in a number of voices. The inter-dependency of all of the branches of the industry is getting recognition in a degree that never obtained before in the world of the motion picture. Very much more than formerly are the great corporations of the industry trying to do a good job of taking care of each of their sectors, instead of operating on the old mad hypothesis of each concern that it would try to do all of the business all of the time. Dreams of dominance have given way to hopes for a healthy existence. Like every other major ordeal, of which the industry has had many, this one already brings promise of important clarifications and progress toward the greater poise of more seasoned industries.

FLOWERY THOUGHTS

NAME values are off a bit this season even in the garden. The "Mary Pickford" gladiolus, originated by a famous specialist at Goshen, Indiana, is offered at a mere fraction of its introductory price. The "Warren G. Harding" sweet pea is just another pink offered in mixtures now, and the "Herbert Hoover" rose, a gold and cerise Austrian briar hybrid, which flamed out in the catalogues at five dollars a plant last year, can now be had for one dollar—and well potted, too, which makes it a bargain even if you don't want it.

WHOSE WORLD IS THIS?

SOMEWHAT testily, "The Parents' Magazine" remarks and makes a publicity release of an observation that: "Out of 161 feature motion pictures now being shown throughout the United States, only one-third are fit for children from 8 to 12 years of age and less than one-half are suitable for adolescents from 12 to 16 years of age, according to reviews of these 161 films published in the June issue of 'The Parents' Magazine.' . . ."

While offering no defense for any part of the product which fairly can be called destructive of influence, one can remark in answer to "The Parents' Magazine" that it should not be considered the obligation of the motion picture, or any of the other arts, to make any larger proportion of the product into fare for juveniles and adolescents. This magazine, incidentally, makes a business of "picking on the pictures" for publicity purposes.

It is only children and their ever zealous mothers in moments of special zeal, who think that the world and all its affairs should be run exclusively for the young. Adults should have their rights. This is their world, today, and on the morrow will belong to the on-coming crop of adults. Doubtless many grown-up ideas, on the screen and elsewhere, make too heady a mental diet for the youngsters. The same exception may be taken to caviar, leiderkranz and Indian chutney. But parents eat them and buy oatmeal for the young, without a demand that the grocery trade be limited to gruel and porridge materials.

LEGAL STRABISMUS

WHEN Mr. George Z. Medalie, federal attorney, speaking at the Motion Picture Club, observed that the only romance and glamour in the criminal world was to be found on the screen and in fiction he was, of course, just another lawyer talking. The reporters of yesteryear who sat in court through the histrionics of William Travers Jerome, Martin Littleton, Charles E. Erbstein, Clarence Darrow, and George Gordon Battle and Arthur Train know better. Not a few of those reporters are story and script writers today. Romance is in the eye of the beholder. Blackstone wrote no textbooks on glamour. Prosecutors require in their business only the uglier facts. Criminals are none the less people and they live lives. A viewpoint and skill with words can make romance of most any life, and screen material, too.

RUSSIA SHOWS HOW!

AFTER all, let us put political and patriotic prejudices aside and admit that Soviet Russia does have some valuable, constructive ideas. Just at the moment we are admiring the Soviet's method of dealing with the matter of inefficiency in the state controlled cinema industry over there. A motion picture director who indulges in graft, or who gets out of alignment with the prescribed policies, can be sentenced to death for sabotage, which is a high crime in U.S.S.R. Recently an art director, one Leonidov, was given life imprisonment, along with two associates, for producing pictures which, in the opinion of the authorities, distorted the bolshevist point of view. What might we not do, and with pleasure, to some of the lads over here who know more than the exhibitor and his customers about what to produce?

'PRODUCERS SKIP ENTIRE GENERATION'

—BERKELEY (CAL.) GAZETTE

NO MIDDLE-AGED

All producers skip an entire generation in depicting families, says a writer in a French magazine, according to the following comment in the GAZETTE at BERKELEY in CALIFORNIA:

> A writer in a French magazine finds something wrong with the movies which can not be blamed on America and which is not confined to American pictures. It is the universal habit of presenting nothing but aged parents. Heroes and heroines may be quite young, but their fathers and mothers are invariably well along in years, and many are portrayed as pathetically old and frail.
> German, French and English films err in this regard as much as our own, the writer says. All the producers skip an entire generation in depicting families. He finds the habit almost as firmly fixed in books and magazine fiction.
> Oddly enough, the Frenchman blames this on young mothers in their twenties who "adopt the sedate manners and prim bonnet of a grandmother." Obviously he does not know American grandmothers. They wear smart hats, not prim bonnets. Mothers in their twenties in this day play golf and bridge and are rarely sedate.
> Is it not more likely that the blame lies with the authors and movie producers who look backward to the days of chimney corner parents instead of looking around them at the current models? The aged parent has long been a type in many forms of art. The portrait of Whistler's mother may have set a standard difficult to outgrow.
> Or is it merely that the younger young people are, the more aged their parents seem to them?

ARCHAIC

Kansas' 64-year-old Sunday labor law is a doddering old man of the books and should undergo some major surgery, says the CAPITAL of TOPEKA:

> Judge Forrest's decision in the district court at Iola throwing out of court an application of the county attorney for an injunction against picture shows running on Sunday will be appealed by the state and brings nearer the time when the legislature will be compelled to revise a Sunday labor law now of 64 years' standing, but either not enforced or else enforced with prejudice for and against various activities. It is a law embarrassing as well to courts as to prosecuting officers.
> The law should be modernized. It does not take notice of social and economic changes since its enactment in 1868 and does not correspond to present living conditions. Perhaps it is as embarrassing and difficult to the legislature to enact a workable law as it is to prosecutors and courts to enforce the present statute, but statutes become outdated, and this is one of the conspicuous examples of outgrown laws.
> The Attorney General seems to make a forcible point in his appeal from the Allen county court, which may be overruled by the Supreme Court, when he notes that the court is limited in its action to the individual merits of cases brought before it. Judge Forrest refused to hear the case on the ground that the county prosecutor ignored violations by others than the particular defendant in this case. Logically, then, the court would refuse to hear any case until all violators were brought before him wholesale.

"MOB IDEOLOGY"

That is what the public relations endeavor of the MPPDA is called by WILLIAM ORTON in an article in the ATLANTIC MONTHLY. Mr. Orton, professor of economics at Smith College, Northampton, Mass., had an article in the same publication in June, 1931, in which he opposed Hays regulation and public group cooperation. In the current article he demands that the "cinema discover something to say, and a way of saying it, uniquely fitted to the particular means of expression." He thinks this is being interfered with by "the mob ideology (public relations) inculcated by the Hays office and the financial interest." Professor Orton continues as follows:

> . . . The movie industry points to the pontifical jurisdiction of the Hays organization, with its production code of negative maxims and its lists of previewing organizations "endorsing" pictures whose one claim to approval is that they do not conflict with the prejudices of really "nice" people. What more could anyone want?
> Again, the first thing to be said is that morally this sort of morality is not enough. Morality of this negative generalized kind needs frequent and vigorous challenging if it is not to degenerate into the lukewarm messiness of people who never indulge in a good drink, a cold bath, or an honest quarrel. All it amounts to is a rude procedure for assuring that the mass of people shall never be startled into thinking seriously. . . . Bad taste, false sentiment, and downright vulgarity abound in endorsed pictures—to say nothing of the unendorsed pictures which go merrily on. The one stipulation is apparently that the cinema shall confirm the comfortable conviction that mass ideology is the best of all possible faiths. . . . The European movie, technically inferior as it often is to the American, is far more stimulating, because it is free both to deal seriously with important social issues and to make fun of things in general—including such sacrosanct affairs as marriage and divorce.
> We are not highbrow . . . we like our Amos 'n' Andy . . . visit the Burlesque on a bellyful of beer and sauerkraut. . . . But even from the commercial point of view it pays better to aim high than to aim low. The American cinema for many years has based its policy upon the appeal to the mob mind. . . .
> . . . As a matter of fact, the industry has produced some of the best narrative films ever made anywhere within the past year or so. But it has gone on so long advertising bad work and good work alike in shrieking superlatives that the appeal no longer 'registers.' We have heard it all so often before. . . .

ALLIED TO SUPPORT INDEPENDENT STUDIOS IF THEY GUARANTEE FILMS

Would Pledge Combined Buying Power of Independents in Return for Sufficient Class A Pictures, if Convention Agrees

Conference of Eastern Exhibitors Called by Allied for Atlantic City, June 22, 23, 24; Will Discuss Distribution

Allied States Association promises to voice its official and united answer to proposed revolutionary changes in distribution when delegates of various Allied States units assemble in Atlantic City on June 22, 23 and 24 for a "Conference of Independent Exhibitors in the East." A principal topic of discussion at the New Jersey conferences, according to a communication from Allied headquarters in Washington, "will be that of marshaling and pledging to independent producers of motion pictures the combined buying power of the independent threatres of the United States in return for an undertaking by such producers to make an adequate number of high-grade pictures, including Class A pictures, to meet the needs of the independent exhibitors."

Most important of the changes in distribution recommended in recent weeks would be to release Class A pictures only to specially designated Class A theatres and to make available pictures of Class B, or secondary quality, to houses placed in that category. They were suggested as a means of alleviating socalled "ills" and "evils" of the industry, particularly the abuses of protection and price slashing. There has been no definite indication that such proposals would be adopted.

Going to "Play Safe"

In any event, Allied's national leaders are going to "play safe," although they claim that "independent theatre owners are not disposed to be unduly disturbed by threatening changes in the system of distributing." According to the current official communication from Washington, these changes "would deprive the small subsequent-run houses of the privilege of showing the best pictures," and in this connection, Allied chieftains believe that inasmuch as "the best defense is an aggressive offense," independent owners "think that the independent theatres should unite on some plan or policy which will leave them in the undisturbed possession and enjoyment of their property in case any of these threats materialize."

"Independent exhibitors," the Allied bulletin continues, "point out that last year in many territories they 'laid off' the product of certain of the companies involved in the present propaganda, and turned to independent producers without committing suicide. With an assured outlet in thousands of independent houses where they would supplant the big companies which still enjoy the cream of the business, it is believed that the independent producers could improve the quality of their product to a point where the loss of the product of the theatre-owning producers would not be fatal."

"The threatened withdrawal of product, if in earnest, means the final elimination of all independent houses," the bulletin concludes.

The Atlantic City gathering will also discuss and hear reports on and "consider legislative problems, quantity and quality of product, sales policies, theatre operation and other subjects" of interest and importance to the theatre operator.

In further discussions of the forthcoming conference, Allied leaders also let it be known that "the question will be considered whether Allied should abandon her present policy and sponsor legislation similar to that passed in Canada and embodied in the Dill bill to put the American Society (of composers, authors and publishers) out of business as a combination in restraint of trade." Allied refers to recent activities in connection with proposed new Federal legislation governing the copyright law, which embraces holdovers and the payment of fees on copyrighted music.

"F. C. Mills, of the American Society," according to Allied, "has been making big talk to the effect that the society, under Allied amendments, will charge the producers more for the use of copyrighted music than the society now collects through the seat tax, and that these increased charges will be passed on to the exhibitors."

"This," continues Allied, "is the bunk, since if it were true, Mr. Mills, who is no philanthropist, would be the first to favor these amendments. Since Mills' attitude towards Allied's reasonable proposals is so antagonistic, and he has chosen to be so offensive in his utterances, Allied will have to consider whether in exercising such moderation she has been wholly fair to the independent theatre owners."

The Allied officials claim that the Atlantic City conference "will also consider a campaign to call freely on the public domain for incidental music in talking pictures and to specially employ writers and musicians for songs and music in musical pictures, so as to free the motion picture industry of the necessity of supporting Mr. Mills in the manner to which he has become accustomed."

F. C. Mills' Statement

Allied's foregoing remarks regarding increased music charges being passed on to exhibitors follow publication in Motion Picture Herald, last issue, of an interview with Mr. Mills, who said in part:

> "It is perfectly stupid of exhibitor leaders to say that exhibitors would not have to pay a music tax if the proposed legislation is enacted. Not only will the exhibitor have to pay, but he will be obliged to pay more than ever. The present tax of 10 cents per seat per year, which has remained the same since 1914 despite the ever-increasing catalogue of the American Society, assesses a 1,000-seat theatre only about 30 cents per day. The exhibitor knows what this tax is for and exactly how much it should be.
> "Now Allied proposes an amendment which would license producers to perform, as well as record, copyrighted music. Thus, by paying the comparatively modest music tax the producer becomes the performing licensee. Recalling how producers pyramided the costs of music recording licenses under the guise of score charges so that exhibitors now pay substantially more than the cost to a producer of a synchronizing license, it will be interesting to observe, in the event this legislation is enacted, whether the present seat taxes are very substantially increased.
> "I consider that Allied has done a poor service indeed for exhibitors in sponsoring the music tax amendment, and I am satisfied that if it is enacted the future will demonstrate that it has actually been a 'dis-service,' for it is certainly worse than no service at all."

Answers Allied Proposal

With regards Allied's proposal to take action on "a campaign to call freely on the public domain for incidental music in talking pictures," Mills said: "That's great; they should have done that years ago. I will help them to do this; I will help them to line up song writers. The public domain offers tremendous possibilities."

In commenting on Allied's plan to "sponsor litigation similar to that passed in Canada, and embodied in the Dill bill, to put the American Society out of business as a combination in restraint of trade," Mr. Mills said "they don't know what they're talking about."

"In the first place," he declared, "there is nothing mentioning 'restraint of trade' in the Canadian legislation. It merely compels the author to file a list of his works and the fee which he will charge for the use of each. Because of the volume of works of members of the American Society, we did not file such a record until early this week, when I sent to Canada, after many months of compilation, a complete catalogue of the works of our members."

"The Dill bill already has been introduced in the Senate," said Mr. Mills, "and we have not raised a hand to stop it. Members in America of our Society do furnish the government, at its Copyright Office, with the titles of works to comply with registration requisites. And if a bill similar to the Canadian measure was passed in the United States, we would merely be compelled to append a record of the fees which are charged for the use of each."

Allied Proposals Up Again

Early in May, leaders of Allied decided to call the Atlantic City conference to discuss film buying problems and their relationship with distributors and to theatre operation, in view of the proximity of the new sales season of 1932-33. The meeting is an outgrowth of a national board of directors' session held in Chicago on April 28 and 29.

Agree to Drop Dual Bills

Eighty per cent of the Detroit independent theatre owners have signed the Allied States' agreement to discard the double feature policy after July 1, according to H. M. Richey, general manager of the Michigan unit of the national organization. It is as yet uncertain whether or not Publix will fall in line.

ROMANCE IN CRIME—AND IN PICTURES

District Attorney Compares Crime Figures of Real Life With the Industry's Version

"Romanticizing crime in motion pictures has in it an element that is immoral from the public viewpoint."

This observation is the summation of remarks made on Tuesday by George Z. Medalie, United States district attorney, at the seventh weekly session of the New York Motion Picture Club Forum.

"I attend motion pictures," said the prosecutor, "and I suppose it is a good thing for the motion picture industry to present a district attorney to the public. I attend pictures particularly of crime and enforcement because from them I am certain to get new ideas." With this remark Mr. Medalie introduced his interpretation of crime as it really exists in every-day life compared with what he called the "romantic" version as depicted by motion pictures.

A Difficult Role

"The district attorney that you present to the public is something of a very courageous and romantic character who is enforcing the law because of a very amorous inclination on his part which cannot be realized unless he 'bucks' the gang," he said. "It is rather difficult for me to fit a role of this kind, having been married for almost a generation and being quite satisfied with the arrangement."

Headed by Gabriel L. Hess, general counsel of the MPPDA, and by Louis L. Nizer, attorney for the New York Film Board of Trade and master of ceremonies at the Club Forum, many of the industry's legal chiefs attended the session to hear Mr. Medalie talk of the treatment of crime in film.

"In the occasional criminal case that came to me in private practice before I assumed the duties of United States district attorney," he continued, "I did not have a spectacular figure to deal with except on rather rare occasions. Having developed something of a commercial interest—that is, a desire to be paid for my services—I did not accept all cases that came to me and strange to say, I found that, of course with rare exceptions, the only people who were charged with crime who could pay substantial fees were persons under indictment who ordinarily before the filing of the indictment were perfectly reputable business men. The romantic figure of the screen, of the tabloid and of the detective magazine, is a figure I never met," he said.

"I remember, over 20 years ago, having the pleasure quite frequently, as a very young assistant district attorney of this county, of trying cases before a very distinguished criminal judge and when he and I put our heads together and compared notes, we found that we were dealing with a character that is far from the romantic, one who is quite cheap and tawdry and a menace to society only because of the particular things he did and not because of the supposedly gigantic organization that he is supposed to represent.

"Of course, you get over to the public exactly what the public wants. The public wants definitely big crime controlled by a powerful syndicate that also controls politics and it is always necessary that some big politician be connected. Up to date, I have not succeeded in finding a big politician in back of the dope industry. I find that they are a lot of cheap thieves. Their word is no good—they haven't any honor among thieves and they terrorize each other more or less. They make some money; some are able to live fairly well—most of them do not. They make enough money to be able to place something at the racetrack and gambling house and in speakeasies and now and then upon a favorite of the opposite sex. Usually they do not last long. Their ramifications are not as complex as is generally supposed and almost always somebody knows what they are doing and is usually close enough on the trail.

"If you present a picture of that sort, you would hardly please your public, so I most heartily sympathize with you. Romanticizing crime in any form, however, as to the adventurous life, or as to the profits or the pleasures, of course, has in it an element that is immoral from the public viewpoint.

"I did not come here to preach motion pictures or how they ought to be done. Personally, I believe that when you write fiction you should write fiction. We should not go to a motion picture that represented the narcotic traffic in its true aspect because if we did, it would not be interesting.

"Sometimes the situation, from a public viewpoint, develops where a common, ordinary, cheap criminal is presented to the public mind as being a heroic figure. So much so, that he becomes a danger.

"For example, about a year ago there was an ordinary cheap bootlegger trying to break in on a local up-state beer 'racket.' He had got himself so glorified that just for arranging to sell beer, he was convicted and given a four-year sentence where ordinarily the average offender gets off with a three months', six months', or one year's sentence." Later he was shot down.*

Generally, said Mr. Medalie, the crime hero is nothing short of a cheap criminal and in his opinion crime life is unromantic and tawdry. If crime was depicted in films in its true light, pictures of this type would have little appeal to the public, he declared.

Following District Attorney Medalie, T.C.T. Crain, who occupies a similar position for the New York County government, discussed crime in general and the part which the motion picture plays, and should play, in educating the public.

Goldstone Demands A Union Settlement

Phil Goldstone, one of the principal backers of independent producers in America, has terminated all financial backing of independent productions pending the adjustment of wage disputes between IATSE locals on the Coast and independents.

Mr. Goldstone this week cancelled financing arrangements which had been made for two independent productions already in preparation, and issued an ultimatum to the effect that he would advance no more money until the studio labor unions are able "to see his side" of the current dispute. Mr. Goldstone's existing contracts with independent producers will be fulfilled, he added, but no new ones will be made until the labor situation has been satisfactorily adjusted.

IATSE locals were refused a wage increase last week by the Independent Producers Association on the grounds that the demand is made at an inopportune time and is discriminatory against independent producers. The studio labor organizations, however, did not withdraw their demands.

"The unions," Mr. Goldstone said, "apparently do not care whether producers are able to make a profit on their pictures or not. All they are interested in is getting their wages. When union studio employees are ready to cooperate in cutting down costs, we can come to an agreement."

The withdrawal of Mr. Goldstone from financing activities would seriously disrupt independent production on the Coast, as he has been identified, financially, with a majority of the independent producing units in Hollywood.

Mr. Goldstone advocated a 25 per cent cut in the release schedules of independents, at the last meeting of the Independent Motion Picture Producers' Association. A resolution was adopted urging a campaign to that end.

Owners to Discuss General Problems

Various problems confronting the exhibitor will be discussed by speakers and in open forum, during the annual convention of the Rocky Mountain Theatre Owners Association at the Brown Palace Hotel, Denver, June 7, 8. Harry Huffman, president will preside at the two-day conference of the exhibitors.

Among the subjects to be discussed will be block booking, double bills, percentage checking, zoning, theatre management, analysis of new product, public relations, advertising and exploitation. R. J. Morrison of the Denver Film Board of Trade will be one of the principal speakers. Election of officers for the coming year will occupy the final session of the convention. Mr. Huffman is expected to be re-elected.

Chicago Exhibitors To Act on Proposed Summer Shutdown

At a meeting called for next week in Chicago by Aaron Saperstein, head of Allied in Illinois, definite action is expected as to what Chicago exhibitors will do on a proposal to close during the summer. Comment and discussions to date center around a plan to close for two months, beginning July 1. The Saperstein meeting is expected to establish the policy which Allied members will pursue.

Balaban & Katz announced that no further closings are contemplated; McVickers, which closed Monday, and the Paradise, closing June 9, will reopen as soon as new season's product becomes available.

Coston offices said no order has been received for closing of Warner houses in Chicago, but Coston anticipates where two or more houses operate in outside towns only, one will be closed. Any discussions he has had with B. & K., Coston says, have been purely to arrive at some solution for better business rather than to close houses.

Closings for the summer would give exhibitors and distributors an opportunity to iron out the knotty release problem brought about by wholesale admission cuts in the territory. Reclassification of all houses with the price scale as the dominating feature of release week is seen as inevitable.

Youngclaus Ruling Is Expected Soon

A decision in the Youngclaus suit against large distributors, the MPPDA, and circuit theatre organizations, is expected soon, following the filing last week of final briefs in the action. June 1 had been designated by the court as the final date on which the litigants could file the briefs.

The case, which was heard in federal court at Lincoln, Nebraska, last month, is expected to set a precedent in the industry as it comprises the first federal test of the legality of zoning schedules.

Universal To Release "Igloo" Depicting Life of Eskimo Tribe

Universal will distribute "Igloo," photographed last summer on the Arctic Sea at the topmost point on the North American Continent. It details the struggle of an Eskimo tribe faced with starvation.

"Igloo" was the result of a film expedition to the topmost crest of the continent fostered by Edward Small, who Wednesday signed a contract with Universal to release it. It was planned and undertaken by Ewing Scott, Hollywood cameraman.

Denials Filed in $175,000 Suits in Pathe Studio Fire

General denials were filed in the New York State Supreme Court Wednesday to two suits aggregating $175,000 damages brought by Carl Edouarde and Gustave Schult for alleged personal injuries received in the fire at the Pathe Sound Studios in upper Manhattan on Dec. 10, 1929. The denials were made by counsel for Manhattan Studios, Inc., one of the defendants.

WHAT IS YOUR VOTE ON "INDECENT"?

¶ Every honestly held opinion and idea in the world of the motion picture is entitled to trial by "a jury of its peers." That is what Motion Picture Herald hereby asks of its motion picture exhibitor readers, as a jury in judgment on the propriety and value of the proposed title "Indecent" for Mr. M. H. Hoffman's production of Flaubert's story, "Madame Bovary."

¶ Mr. Martin Quigley, publisher and editor-in-chief, has expressed his opinion to Mr. Hoffman, and, in the letter herewith presented, the producer sets forth his attitude:

My dear Mr. Quigley:

You have expressed your objections to the use of the title "INDECENT" as a substitute title for "MADAME BOVARY," which we are producing. Miss Louella Parsons has done likewise. I respect your opinions. At the same time, quite a number of exchangemen and exhibitors expressed a preference for this title.

I have been producing and distributing motion pictures for twenty-two years, and I have never knowingly done anything detrimental or what one would describe as in bad taste to this industry of ours. I don't want to begin at this late stage, and when we can least afford it.

Your publications are the most widely read and cover not only every exhibitor but every branch of the business.

Would you care to use your columns to get the consensus of opinion from the exhibitors on the proposed title?

It is quite satisfactory to me that you even ask the question whether their immediate profits on a title, which may be considered too sensational by certain classes of people, may not prove unprofitable in the long run. In doing that, however, I would appreciate if you will make it quite clear that the picture itself could by no means be objectionable to anybody, since it is based on a well-known stage classic by Gustave Flaubert, a great playwright. You can readily appreciate that if we gave the impression that the subject matter of the picture as well as the title is objectionable, my desire to cooperate and do what is right would prove fatal to my production and my investment.

Thanking you in advance for your cooperation, I am, with kindest personal regards,

Sincerely yours,
M H Hoffman

NEW CANADA CONTRACT EMBODIES CLAUSES OF 5-5-5 AND UNIVERSAL

Standard Exhibition Contract Effective for One Year; Independents of Quebec and Ontario Protest Provisions

By W. M. GLADISH, Toronto

Almost out of the blue sky came the announcement last week that the distributor members of the association known as the Motion Picture Distributors and Exhibitors of Canada, Toronto, of which Col. John A. Cooper is president, had adopted the "Canadian License Agreement," consisting of 20 numbered articles providing the terms of the standard exhibition contract to be effective throughout Canada for one year starting June 1, 1932.

The new arbitration clauses in the contract were adopted Wednesday by the Toronto Film Board of Trade.

For many weeks, conferences on the new standard contract had been in progress between representatives of the distributor organization and of five provincial associations of independent exhibitors, namely, Ontario, Quebec, Manitoba, Saskatchewan and British Columbia. Many points were discussed and the original form of the agreement contained an introduction listing these independent associations as agreeing to the terms. The first rift took place, however, when the Quebec Allied Theatrical Industries, representing the Quebec independents, withdrew. Several questions were raised by the Allied Exhibitors of Ontario as well, it is said, and the outcome has been that the final agreement does not mention the independent associations and the introduction reads that the "Canadian License Agreement" contains all of the 20 articles filed with the Motion Picture Distributors and Exhibitors of Canada. In other words, the agreement has been adopted by the distributors who have been and are now printing new contract forms under its terms.

5-5-5 and "U" Provisions Included

The agreement embodies various new features, including clauses which were taken largely from proposals under the so-called 5-5-5 contract drawn up in the United States, as well as one or two details drawn from Universal's new contract which recently was made public in the United States.

Some discussion arose over the tax clause in the Canadian agreement but this has been included in the final document. This clause, which had been incorporated in previous contracts and is, therefore, not new, provides that any new fees or taxes affecting the distributors are to be passed on to the exhibitors.

Exception was also taken by Ontario Allied, it is said, to the "Acceptance of Application" clause which had been drawn from the Universal contract in the United States. A new paragraph reads:

"The distributor agrees that until such application shall have been finally acted upon by the proper official of the distributor it will not negotiate with any other exhibitor in the exhibitor's competitive area for the same run of the motion pictures covered by this agreement. The exhibitor agrees that, in consideration of the foregoing, this offer and application shall remain binding upon the exhibitor and will not be withdrawn by the exhibitor until 20 days shall have elapsed from the date of this application."

It has been explained that this provision really works both ways for the exhibitor and distributor because it prevents the salesman from using the one acceptance as a lever to obtain business from a competitive exhibitor and likewise prevents the exhibitor from withdrawing his application within 20 days through possible negotiations with a rival exchange.

Must Advise of Substitutions

A new feature under the heading of "Description and Titles of Photoplays," governing substitution, compels the distributor to advise the exhibitor of any substituted picture in the notice of availability and, unless otherwise provided for in the schedule, the playing of such substitution is at the exhibitor's option.

A new detail of the arbitration clause is the inclusion of the actual statement that the parties have the right of appeal under the Arbitration Act, if any, in force in the province in which the arbitration takes place, otherwise the award is to be accepted as conclusive.

Ontario Allied raised an objection, it is said, to the employment of a local checker, such as the banker or other resident, for a percentage booking but this is not stated in the agreement. At the same time it is stipulated that the distributor will treat any obtained information as confidential except in any arbitration proceedings or litigation.

The agreement has a new roadshow clause which limits a distributor to two roadshows yearly and entitles the exhibitor to cancel one other feature for one that is roadshown if the latter is included in the contract. This can be done only, however, if the exhibitor gives written notice to such effect to the distributor not later than 14 days before the date fixed for the exhibition of such other excepted picture.

Under the heading of "License," the so-called sound clause, which was formerly a lengthy rider, has been reduced to a few sentences. It stipulates that the license to exhibit shall include a license under all copyrights owned and controlled by the distributor but not the right of public performance of copyrighted music. The situation with regard to the latter in Canada is still regarded as up in the air

Under "Exhibition and Advertising," a new provision is made whereby the exhibitor is prevented from advertising a subsequent run of a picture during the prior run by a competitive exhibitor unless the protection is less than 15 days but even then he cannot advertise prices that will be lower than those for the prior run. An exception is made in the use of advertising inside the theatre which is not intended for removal therefrom by the public. This paragraph was taken from the proposed 5-5-5 agreement in the United States.

Distributor Is Compelled to Advise Exhibitor of Any Substituted Picture in Notice of Availability of Product

No assignment of contract by an exhibitor is permitted without the written consent of the distributor except an assignment in case of the sale of a theatre, but such will not relieve the original exhibitor of liability unless the distributor agrees to a release in writing.

The arbitration clause is largely as before, the board to consist of two arbitrators, the conduct of a case to be in accordance with the rules of arbitration which are a part of the agreement and in accordance with arbitration laws in force.

Under the heading of "Payment," the exhibitor agrees to pay the designated amount for a photoplay at least five days in advance of the date of shipment from the distributor or the last previous exhibitor. This time was stipulated in the 5-5-5 agreement. Previously in Canada it was three days. The usual stipulation is made with regard to "protection."

A clause that caused discussion concerns "loss of and damage to prints." The question of liability for the exhibitor, when it was shown there was no negligence on his part, was brought up. The clause adopted by the distributors, however, holds the exhibitor liable for loss, theft or damage on the basis of cost of replacement per lineal foot during a period of defined possession but he is not liable when it is shown that loss or destruction occurred while in transit from the exhibitor. If a print is received in damaged condition by the exhibitor, he is required to telegraph the exchange prior to the second presentation of the print at the theatre.

In case of failure or delay in returning or sending on a print, the exhibitor agrees to pay the distributor any damage caused the distributor and any loss caused any other exhibitor to be determined by arbitration. This payment for such loss is a new provision.

Accessories Leased

The agreement provides that an exhibitor must lease all advertising accessories for contracted photoplays from or through the distributor and the material must not be sold, leased or given away by the exhibitor.

A clause of mutual advantage is found under the heading, "Delay in or Prevention of Performance," which states that if the exhibitor is prevented from exhibiting or the distributor from delivering a photoplay for causes beyond their control, the license in respect to such photoplay will terminate and revert to the distributor without liability on the part of either party providing reasonable written notice of such termination is given.

40 OR 45 CENTS TAX EXEMPTION IS UP TO CONGRESS CONFEREES

Senate Passes Tax Measure; Sets Admission Exemption at 40 Cents; Leaders Refuse Mills' Plea to Start at 10 Cents

By F. L. BURT, Washington

The federal tax bill which was passed by the United States Senate at Washington on Tuesday at midnight includes a 10 per cent tax on all amusement tickets over 40 cents. Although Secretary of the Treasury Ogden Mills went before the Senate finance committee early on Tuesday and again urged the reduction of the admission tax exemption to 10 cents on the ground that the tax bill as it then stood was many millions of dollars under the amount needed to meet governmental budget expenses. Senate leaders stood by their action in increasing the exemption to 40 cents and refused to reopen the matter.

Ending the long controversy over the nation's taxation legislation, the Senate at exactly 12:20 A. M. on Wednesday passed it by a vote of 72 to 11.

Last-minute efforts to put the Walsh sales tax amendment into the bill were defeated, despite the fact President Hoover in a sudden and highly dramatic appearance before the Senate on Tuesday endorsed this form of taxation in preference to special excise taxes, and regardless of the further fact that Mr. Mills strongly supported the sales tax before the Senate finance committee. The Walsh amendment was beaten 53 to 27, nearly two to one.

The general tax bill which was passed Tuesday night under the insistent demands of the leaders that it be speeded up, was immediately sent to conference. The Senate action gave assurance that the admission tax exemption would be not less than 40 cents or more than the 45 cents exemption written into the bill some weeks ago by the House. An early agreement by the conference committee is expected and enactment of the bill before the end of the week appears possible. The admission tax phase of the bill, providing for exemption of 40 cents, was adopted by the Senate last week by a vote of 44 to 33. Senator Hiram Johnson of California introduced the amendment. At that time, the Senate also approved the provision restoring the present exemption on tickets costing $3 and less on July 1, 1934. The current emergency taxation, therefore, would cover two years.

An effort by Senator Wagner of New York to obtain exemption for admissions to the spoken drama of less than $3 was defeated by a vote of 39 to 28.

First Change to 30-Cent Exemption

The increase in the admissions tax exemption came last week after Senator Smoot of Utah, chairman of the finance committee, announced that his committee had agreed to raise the exemption from the 10 cents provided in the committee bill to 30 cents, apparently in an effort to head off the revolt which was assured if the committee attempted to enforce its original exemption of less than 10 cents, inserted in the bill at the insistence of Secretary of the Treasury Mills at the beginning of the present session of Congress.

The effect of that change, it was stated, would be to reduce the revenue from admissions from $110,000,000 to $57,000,000, while under the 40-cent exemption, the revenue is estimated at $44,000,000 to $46,000,000. The 45-cent exemption, which was provided by the House of Representatives some weeks ago, was figured as returning $40,000,000.

Following the offering of the 40-cent exemption by Senator Johnson, Senator Tydings of Maryland announced that he wanted the figure raised to 50 cents. It was explained by Senator Johnson, however, that he would prefer to leave the figure at the House rate of 45 cents, "because," he said, "I thought that with the committee action increasing it to 31 cents, there could be no logical objection to making it 41 cents and then permitting the House and the Senate in conference to determine as between 41 and 46 cents. I would prefer that to the amendment that the Senator from Maryland suggests, or taking the House rate. I was endeavoring to do that which I thought would be easy of accomplishment."

The various forms of taxation which are incorporated in the new Senate bill and which will affect the motion picture industry directly, or indirectly through ordinary business operation, and the estimated revenues to be derived, are:

| | Estimated Revenues |
|---|---|
| INCOME TAX | |
| Individual (normal 4 and 8 per cent surtax maximum 55 per cent over $1,000,000) | $225,000,000 |
| Corporation, 14 per cent | 52,000,000 |
| EXCISE TAX | |
| Lubricating oil, 4 cents a gallon | 35,000,000 |
| Radios and phonographs, 5 per cent | 11,000,000 |
| Passenger automobiles, 3 per cent; trucks, 2 per cent; accessories, 2 per cent | 55,000,000 |
| Cosmetics, 10 per cent (Some used at studios) | 12,000,000 |
| Candy, 2 per cent | 5,000,000 |
| Soft drinks | 7,500,000 |
| Chewing gum, 2 per cent | 1,000,000 |
| Tires, 2¼ cents a pound; tubes, 4 cents a pound | 3,000,000 |
| Gasoline, 1 cent per gallon | 150,000,000 |
| Electricity distribution, 3 per cent on privately-owned utilities | 55,000,000 |
| IMPORT TAXES (Tariffs) | |
| Coal, 10 cents per 100 pounds | 500,000 |
| Lumber, $3 per 1,000 board feet | 1,000,000 |
| Postal increases, First Class, 3 cents; Second Class, 1932 rates | 160,000,000 |
| STAMP AND MISCELLANEOUS TAXES | |
| Telephone, telegraph, leased wire, radio and cable: 10 cents on telephone messages of 50 cents to $1; 15 cents, $1 to $2; 20 cents over, $2; 5 per cent on leased wires; 10 cents on cablegrams | 24,000,000 |
| ADMISSIONS, 10 PER CENT ON ALL TICKETS OVER 40 CENTS | 44,000,000 |
| Bank checks, 2 cents | 95,000,000 |
| Safety deposit box leases, 10 per cent | 1,000,000 |
| Capital stock and bond issues, 10 cents per $100 par value | 8,000,000 |
| Real estate conveyances, 50 cents each $500; value above $100 | 10,000,000 |
| Stock transfer, 4 cents a share | 22,000,000 |
| Bond transfer, 4 cents a bond | 5,000,000 |

Objection to the 40-cent exemption was voiced last week by Senator Harrison of Mississippi, who declared the 30-cent figure would take care of the smaller theatres, drawing from Senator Johnson the statement that "I have grown sick and tired of being lectured concerning this bill."

"It has been said again and again upon this floor," said Senator Johnson, "that for two weeks and a half—three weeks, I believe it was stated last night—the finance committee did its work upon this bill, and wrote a bill; and then when the superman, the Secretary of the Treasury, came into the finance committee, in 15 minutes it threw its work out of the window, as was asserted, and accepted what the superman, the Secretary of the Treasury, had said should be written into the bill.

"So, sir, I say that an increase of the exemption upon a cheap theatre, such as is asked here, commends itself to those of us who are familiar with the situation, with the class of entertainment that is given, with the necessity that exists for it among our people, particularly at times like this; and I trust the fact that the revenue which was stricken from the bill by the finance committee itself this morning will not interfere with the amendment being adopted by the Senate."

Allied Says Vote Vindicates Its Stand; Kuykendall Says All Would Be Taxed but for Efforts of Hays Office

A Football of Capitol Hill

The proposed tax on tickets for amusement places and theatres, called the "football" of the Federal revenue bill, has been literally and figuratively tossed about Capitol Hill since Congress convened early in December. The administration, along with many other recommendations, suggested that the legislators should pass a 10 per cent tax on all tickets costing 10 cents or more.

After many weeks in the House of Representatives' ways and means committee, during which all branches of the industry protested loudly against a 10-cent exemption, the House finally, on April 1, adopted a bill which included a 10 per cent tax on tickets of 45 cents and over.

The measure then went to the Senate finance committee, where it was reported at various times as likely to stipulate an exemption ranging anywhere from 10 cents to 46 cents. The amusement tax was the subject of many vigorous battles in the Senate until the bill emerged late last week bearing the recommendations of exemptions of 40 cents, and finally passed with this figure on Tuesday.

Charles C. Pettijohn, of the MPPDA and the Film Boards of Trade, led the fight against the tax on behalf of MPPDA members, while Abram F. Myers, chairman of the board of Allied States Association, marshaled the forces of Allied's independent members.

The Senate finance committee's recommendations of last week were followed immediately by a statement from Allied, which said:

"THANK YOU, HIRAM JOHNSON

"The Senate yesterday, on motion of Senator Hiram Johnson, of California, raised the

THE STAGE—FROM CAMERA EYE

Noted Author, Essayist and Critic Comments on Five Plays of the Day in This His Ninth Article

By BENJAMIN DeCASSERES

A THOUSAND SUMMERS

Jesse Lasky told me some years ago that every picture that was then being made had only one title, "Her Great Sacrifice."

Well, here's the good old lady again on the stage. This sacrifice thing either on the screen or stage has always given me a pain not in the neck.

Self-sacrifice, to my hoary and cynical mind, is just lack of spine. And that's the trouble with Sheila Pennington in Merrill Rogers' new play, "A Thousand Summers." She hadn't the courage to show Neil Barton, a twenty-one-year-old virge, the way tc the Land of Delectable Sin because she had promised his aunt, from the Sloblands somewhere west of Ohio, that she wouldn't (hey, Mr. Ripley!).

It has picture stuff in it, but it will take a lot of Ben Hecht steam to make it come to a boil.

We are dumped down into the Lake district of England. In an old-fashioned hotel there is Sheila, a Continental-minded Englishwoman who takes 'em and leaves 'em. She is just at present tied up with Laurence Hereford, who is her bundle-carrier and chauffeur between London and Paris.

An American family is blustering around the premises. The nephew, Neil, falls hard for the enchanting widow. Working up to the climax of this lifeless, stuffed-dummy play, at the end of the second act he demands that Sheila (in the dead of the night, just about the time Paul Revere started on his ride) be his'n. She refuses, because she had, as I have already revealed to you, promised the Slobland aunt that Neil must not lose his—well, whatever a fellow loses. He, now in a high gland-tantrum, picks up the kitchen wench, who's itching to knock a kid saint for a goal, and goes to the boathouse with her for the night, where they do not play contract bridge.

In the third act the boy is off to Paris, and maybe Sheila and her disillusioned bundle-carrier follow, if you care a deeayeemen about it.

Only Hollywood can make some real entertainment out of this ancient piece of waxworks with a kind of Robert Montgomery-Pauline Frederick combination.

Jane Cowl played Sheila. She still has that beautiful voice and voluptuous ensemble; but, as ever, to me, her acting is artistically insincere. She does not seem to believe a word of what she is saying or doing. It isn't acting. It's didactic stylization (lugs to you!). Franchot Tone didn't like his part, either, as the boy. Osgood Perkins, one of the best actors on the stage, was miscast and downcast.

HEIGH-HO, EVERYBODY

This comedy by Herbert Polesie and Jack McGowan, is the second attempt to satirize the radio ballyhoo and hooey. It is better than "Wild Waves," the play that was bought for Bing Crosby. But, still, it does not come off. It drags. It is heavy. It lacks the click. There is, however, a lot of good picture stuff in it.

It angles around Buddy Baxter, who can croon well only when he has a cold. So his manager keeps him on the edge of pneumonia for his celebrated boop-boopa-doop stuff. The theory is that all crooners have throat-catarrh.

There is a gang angle, too, that would prove exciting on the screen. The racketeers have invaded the radio field, according to these veracious playwrights, and Buddy is kidnapped in order to put over a rival crooner. The dicks arrive in time and Buddy croons from the hideaway where the gang took him, and the swooning maidens of America are saved. That's the big "funny" scene.

The whole thing moves as slowly as a prohibition agent toward a glass of ice-water. Here, again, the tempo of the screen is needed to build up a story that has its moments and laughs.

Joseph Santley, Edna Hibbard and Harry Rosenthal were the main troupers. Santley as Buddy the crooner can out-croon Vallee and Downey at their best.

ON THE MAKE

I do not know whether Your Uncle Will Hays will let the Hollywood scene-shufflers play around with this or not. Oh, I guess it can be washed up for the Methodist circuit.

"On the Make" is by Roger Gray. Judged by the standards of Ibsen, Shakespeare, Strindberg, Pirandello and Moliere, it isn't really a play at all. It's a piece of knitting, darning or crocheting. It took no more brainwork to write it than to get a cat's breakfast.

Well, boys, let's to it: Eva, Christine and Vangie are a-combin' of their hair and a-plyin' of their trade up in the obscene Seventies. They bring in a Vice Squad Saint Anthony for a snifter, and one of the pleasure-maidens finds herself with a ten-spot in her mitt and the Reformatory in the offing. (Visualize this arrest on the screen: great!)

She, however, gets back to the old shack in a month or so. So one shot follows another shot until some aviators flop in. Two of the trulls marry the air-birds and a third goes off with a fellow by the name of Sears from the Sloblands. This fellow was, by the way, played amazingly well by Harry Short.

To jam this masterpiece through to the screen there will have to be a lot of flit put on the dialogue. There is, however, a farce-comedy in it. Why don't we kid Vice a little? And what is Vice anyhow? Well, like food, it's something everybody seems to be interested in. Dost thou think because thou are virtuous there shall be no more cakes and ale? "On the Make" is the answer.

Joe E. Brown could play all the roles in this thing.

BULLS, BEARS AND ASSES

New York is now the Stamford and New Haven of Hollywood. It is a place where plays are first pre-viewed before they go onto the screen.

There's "Bulls, Bears and Asses." This play by Milton Herbert Gropper played just one night. It had a cast of 29. The settings were by Cleon Throckmorton. Could it be that "Bulls, Bears and Asses" opened at 8:45 and was sold to Paramount or Fox at 11 o'clock sharp? If so, why not erect an auction booth in the lobby when plays open? If Walter Wanger, say, has bought the play at the end of the second act, they could then shut up the show and give the suckers a one-third refund, shooing the critics into a neighboring speakeasy to make it all right with them.

The Gropper show was on the mad doings in the Street in 1929 and will make a picture almost as noisy as Bert Lahr's mouth. Mobs, frenzied nuts, ticker-tape, suckers, bulges, dips, etc., etc. There's a story about a couple that the panic melted and who finally weld it up again. But that's only a local issue.

It was kind of pediculous on the stage. But, as I say, some one may already be recooking the thing out on a lot in Hollywood. It'll take a George Bancroft voice to howl through the thing. But I'm for it!

THERE YOU ARE

Doug Fairbanks, Hollywood, Cal.: Drop that Robinson Crusoe stuff and buy "There You Are!" All Mexican bandits. Jail-breaking. Romance galore. Diablo is character made for you. Lots of music. Collect.

This musical paroxysm in two acts is laid down in Mexico, and I saw in it a whale of an entertaining screen show for the Avenue A and B ennui-bitten fans.

Ah! that Diablo. Ah! those old-time movies! Those old-time musical plays—"Come, dear, and rest, close to my breast, far from all sorrow, knowing no tomorrow." It clicks like a mollusc.

Maybe it would be simply grand if played from another angle for the Marx Brothers, with lyrics by Senator Borah.

Lilian Harvey, European star, has been signed to a five-year contract by Fox. She will arrive in this country in the fall, at the completion of her current contract with Ufa.

Lightman Sharply Challenges Claim Of Brookhart Bill

Unalterable opposition to the Brookhart bill on the ground it would work to the detriment of the independent exhibitor, was expressed in Kansas City by M. A. Lightman, president of the MPTOA, last week. Lightman had attended the annual convention of the MPTA of Kansas and Missouri at Topeka.

"Sponsors of the bill say it will eliminate block booking and protection with it," declared Mr. Lightman. "If this is the case, the bill will really have the effect of giving the circuits unreasonable protection over the independents.

"Before the independent exhibitor will be able to get around to buying his product on the basis of individual pictures," he said, "the circuit houses will have shown the pictures as much as 90 days ahead. The Brookhart bill requires that each picture be accompanied by a 1,000-word synopsis for the benefit of the buying exhibitor. By the time the independent exhibitor complies with all the red tape and digests the synopsis and by the time the circuit-owning producers are ready to let the independents have their pictures, it will be another three or four months. So that instead of doing away with protection, the Brookhart measure will really extend protection of circuits over independents.

"The remedy for block bookings is not the Brookhart bill but in a revision of the present system of buying that will allow the exhibitor a greater number of eliminations. That's what we are fighting for," Mr. Lightman declared.

Current conditions call for deliberation and discretion in revising admission prices, cautioned Mr. Lightman. He said "We will wreck the industry if we don't curb 10-cent admissions for high class pictures."

Dr. Troland, Color Expert, Falls to Death from Cliff

Dr. Leonard Thompson Troland, 43, distinguished Harvard scientist and chief engineer of Technicolor, Inc., Boston, was killed last Friday when he fell 250 feet off a precipice into a rocky canyon on Mount Wilson, California. He had apparently fainted while posing for a photograph by R. D. Eaton, of Hollywood, his companion.

Dr. Troland had been living with his wife in Hollywood, where he had gone to regain his health on a leave of absence from Harvard. He had been with Technicolor since 1925, and was co-inventor and responsible for the development of manufacturing methods of motion picture photography in natural color.

"The BEST ENGLISH PICTURE"

An Appreciation of British Studio Ability Revealed by "Reserved For Ladies"

By MARTIN QUIGLEY

The motion picture industry in England has long entertained serious misgivings as to just where it stood in the American market.

At one moment the English industry felt it was encountering a menacing hostility in the American market—something amounting to a virtual boycott.

At another time a feeling of defeatism prevailed; a consciousness that it simply was not able—and possibly never would be able—to produce films which would rate advantageously alongside of American product.

And at all times there has been a deep-rooted impression that unless it were able to achieve a miracle of excellency the trade here would continue aloof and unimpressed as far as any British picture was concerned. The American trade press, particularly, has been held to be consistently unsympathetic.

As a matter of fact, the American industry, including the trade press, has had practically nothing from the English studios which represented a reasonable test of its potential appreciation. But the end of that road has come. A really first-rate motion picture from an English studio has arrived in the American market. It is: "Reserved For Ladies," distributed here by Paramount.

Because of the record we particularly welcome this opportunity, afforded by "Reserved For Ladies," to pronounce a few words of hearty congratulation.

"Reserved For Ladies" is not a great picture or a great attraction but it is a thoroughly creditable production in all respects and it measures up advantageously alongside of what is commonly referred to as an average program picture. As such its position is unique; it is, in our opinion, the best picture we have had out of an English studio.

There may be satisfaction to the industry in England in the fact that this picture more nearly resembles Hollywood product than anything previously done over there. Again, this fact may afford small delight, if any. But it should not be despised because Hollywood has, without question, established the standards to which the public the world over looks.

The technical treatment of "Reserved For Ladies" is such, together with all of the other essential details of production, that it is now demonstrably certain that the English studio has advanced to a point at which it is able to compete advantageously with the product of any other studio.

"Reserved For Ladies" should be a heartening development for the British industry, and for the American industry as well, because good pictures, wherever they may be produced, reflect benefits upon the whole industry of the motion picture.

Chicago Mayor Urges Police Supplant City Censor Board

Mayor Anton J. Cermak of Chicago is behind a movement to abolish the local censor board, thereby saving the city $33,000 in salaries annually in an economy move, and supplant it with policemen in any way incapacitated for active duty. The council finance committee has voted to abolish the board.

The committee action was followed by a protest from the Chicago Women's Club. Local distributors for years have had difficulty with the local censor. The mayor believes policemen fully capable of passing on motion pictures.

RKO, Loew's May Pool Interest On Six Houses in Two Cities

Loew's and RKO are negotiating for the pooling of interests on theatres in Columbus, Ohio, and Rochester, N. Y., whereby the two companies would combine operation, divide operating costs and split net profits.

Involved in the deal are the RKO Palace and Majestic, and Loew's Ohio and Broad Street, in Columbus; and the RKO Palace and Loew's, in Rochester.

RKO To Ask Debenture Owners For Purchase Price Interest

Radio-Keith-Orpheum Corporation has informed the committee on securities of the New York Stock Exchange that the corporation intends to call upon holders of the company's part-paid certificates for 10-year 6 per cent debentures and common stock-interest for the accrued interest on the unpaid portion of the original purchase price of the certificates, payable on the regular interest date of the certificates.

As a matter of convenience the corporation will deduct interest receivable on the unpaid principal of the bonds from interest payable on the entire principal when making regular interest payments.

British and Dominions to Make All Paramount British Films

All Paramount British pictures will in the future be produced by British and Dominions. Herbert Wilcox will supervise.

The Paramount unit at Elstree is either being absorbed by British and Dominions, or will be disbanded, in the interests of greater economy. Stephen Fitzgibbons and Harry Lachman, of the unit, are returning to the Joinville studio near Paris.

AN EXHIBITORS' PARADISE

Land of Peace Is War-Torn China, but There Are Problems, Says J. E. Noronha, Hong Kong

Even in troublous times such as these, there is still a land of milk and honey where exhibitors pursue a peaceful, happy existence; where box office change-makers tinkle musically—and profitably, night and day; where no problems of double bills, price cutting, protection or taxation beset the exhibitor and ruffle the even tenor of his pleasant days. A little far removed is this exhibitors' land of milk and honey, to be sure. A little strange are its customs and its people, but scarcely stranger than is its comparative prosperity and its freedom from the vexations which pursue the distributor and exhibitor of motion pictures in America.

This exhibitor's paradise happens to be, paradoxically enough, in China, which for turbulence and perennial disturbances has usurped the place formerly occupied in the world's mind by the Mount of Vesuvius or the belligerent little nations of Central America. Word of China's beneficence to its motion picture exhibitors, or at least those of them whose enterprises are situated in the cosmopolitan cities of Hong Kong and Shanghai, is brought by J. E. Noronha, who, in his capacity as general manager of Hong Kong Amusements, Ltd., is charged with the profitable operation of more than 40 theatres. Only nine of these enterprises are in the comparatively secure boundaries of the British Crown colony of Hong Kong. The scattered others are more or less exposed to the occasional annoyances of the martial element of Chinese youth. But even these, it would seem, are successful in turning potential disaster into a harvest of silver "Mex's," for the armed guard of China pauses in its marching as to war long enough to pay admission to a theatre exhibiting the latest war picture from America.

War Pictures Their Weakness

War pictures, Mr. Noronha relates, are a particular weakness of the native Chinee. An "All Quiet on the Western Front," a "Dawn Patrol," a "Hell's Angels," or any of the other moving epics of men in conflict which have emerged from Hollywood are as certain of luring the Chinese silver into the box office as a chop suey sign on Broadway is of getting the visiting Nebraska dollar. But China may not look upon the photograph of either its own actual or dramatized warfare, for vigilant British officialdom within the Chinese domains of the Empire have placed upon them the forbidding finger of the censor. Chinese audiences may view neither the newsreel version of domestic warfare nor the fictionalized productions of the American studio, such as "Shanghai Express."

But this does not mean that the British censor has assumed the proportions of a "problem" to the exhibitor in China. There is very little censorial tampering with film which does not contain in its subject matter some possible affront to racial dignity or sensibilities. Picture the Chinee as a romantic mystic and you elude the censor and please the audience mightily. Film him as a prince of treachery or the greedy, unfeeling lord of an opium den filled with stupefied humanity and your picture will never play the profitable theatres of the cosmopolitan China coast. Nothing so delights the Chinese picture-goer as the sight of a member of his race portrayed as an honorable and romantic character in an American picture, Mr. Noronha avows.

However smooth the pathway of the China exhibitor's lot may be by comparison with that of his American brother in arms, the roses underfoot, as might be expected, are not entirely free of thorns. There is, for example, the ever present vexation of money values and exchange. In the cosmopolitan cities, the Mexican silver dollar is the monetary standard. Its value in gold exchange is 25 cents. Thus, the exhibitor in China receives his revenue in a depreciated silver, but is obliged to pay for his film on the basis of a gold standard. This situation has boosted average first-run admissions to $1.50 in Mexican silver, which, on the basis of bills payable to the American distributor, is still equivalent to only 40 cents.

Advertise in Two Languages

Theatre advertising, too, becomes a problem because of its costliness. Exhibitors, in order to reach their fullest audience possibilities, are obliged to advertise in two languages, both English and Chinese. The mixed theatre audiences also require unusual care in program selection; dialogue becomes a serious problem and action pictures a necessity. Hong Kong Amusements, Ltd., has hit upon the plan of distributing booklets with the text of each picture translated into Chinese. Synopses in English are also made available. The 15-minute intermissions between programs offer an opportunity to study the booklets.

Mr. Noronha offers the opinion that his audiences at Hong Kong and Shanghai are more critical than the average American audience.

40 Cent Exemption Passed By Senate

exemption under the proposed admission tax to include admissions of 40 cents. In other words, under the bill as it now stands, the proposed tax will start with admissions of 41 cents.

"Representatives of Allied in their contacts and correspondence with Congressmen and Senators have invariably received expressions of interest in and sympathy for the independent theatres. There was a uniform willingness, even anxiety, to fix the exemption at a figure which would exclude the majority of such houses from the tax. The figures arrived at in the House and Senate are a clear indication of this.

"Because a good many independent houses charge admissions of 50 cents Allied tried hard to have the exemption fixed at that figure, but this could not be done without exempting the most of the great chain houses and this the Congress was unwilling to do.

"The outcome is a clear demonstration of the wisdom of Allied's course in presenting the situation of the independents separately and apart from the presentation on behalf of the producers and chains."

Early in the week there also arrived from Ed Kuydendall, a theatre owner of Columbus, Mississippi, and an important member and an executive of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America, a communication which outlined the activities of the Motion Picture Producers and Distributors in keeping the exemption on tickets at a figure which is 30 cents higher than the exemption of 10 cents originally proposed by the Secretary of the Treasury in December. In his statement, Mr. Kuykendall made charges against certain interests in the business and stated that the industry would save $70,000,000 through raising of the exemption to a minimum of 40 cents. Mr. Kuykendall's communication follows:

"First, I would be ungrateful were I not to say that had it not been for the intelligent concerted efforts of the Hays office the small-town theatre owners of this country would today have a tax on all admissions. There is no question as to that.

"I come out of this fight with certain memories that will be everlasting. First, I have never been able to understand how certain interests could have taken the position they have in a matter of this kind that was so vital to the whole industry. Those who are familiar with the procedure over this period of five months will know, without my saying, to whom I refer.

"I found, after really getting on the inside, that the gentlemen charged with the responsibility of enacting the laws which govern this industry and every other industry do not regard us so highly as some might think. Personally, I could not expect them to have any other attitude after knowing some of the things that are transpiring in the motion picture industry and after having come in contact with some of the men who are higher up in our industry and having an understanding of their conception of the ethics of business. I wonder how we got any consideration at all. I say, without hesitation, that unless we do go about the very important business of putting our house in order that the American people are going to see to it for themselves via the road of this American Congress. It is amazing the number of letters that a Congressman has on his desk from all parts of the United States protesting against some of the terrible pictures that we have foisted on them in the past few months from a moral viewpoint.

"I have, from time to time at the various conventions, said these same things, but even then, I had no conception of the real situation as it pertains to the attitude of our national lawmakers. The relief that we got in the exemption of 40-cent tickets was purely and simply through sympathy for the small-town theatre owner, the very ones that have paid the least attention to fighting for their rights. It seems that the small-town theatre owner just can not be brought to realize that if he is to exist, he must help fight the battles of the industry that are for the common good of all and not sit back and wait on other organizations to do his fighting for him. This, of course, always prevailed and will continue to probably, but it seems to me that we, as independent theatre owners, should stick together and work for the common cause, laying aside all petty differences of the various organizations that work under the guise of helping the independent theatre owners.

"Anyway, this battle is over. I think the exemption of 40-cent tickets was a great victory and this might be improved upon in conference. It saved the industry no less than $70,000,000. Certainly this was worth fighting for and it was more than I personally thought we might get."

STUDIOS PLAN EXPLOITATION DRIVE BEFORE FILM GOES IN PRODUCTION

Idea Is to Have Men Who Understand Exhibition, Sales and Advertising Problems Follow Through Until Picture Is Made

By LEO MEEHAN

Combination of salesmanship and exploitation with actual production is being given its first serious trial in Hollywood. The plan promises to produce some definite results, providing the advertising and sales boys down in New York do not gum it up too much by interference.

Several studios are developing their own systems, in their own ways, but the general idea is to begin to plan advertising and sales campaigns even before a picture goes into production. Instead of waiting until the picture is completed, and then having a studio publicity department (which understands little and often cares less about either sales or advertising) dump a ton of miscellaneous publicity bunk, "suggestions for ads," publicity and production stills, trailer cut-outs and what-not into the New York advertising department, the exploitive and sales possibilities of a picture will be taken up and worked upon scientifically, right from the scenario department to the cutting rooms.

In the good old golden days, when the master print arrived in New York, the "master showmen" and "master salesmen" foregathered in the home office projection room. In darkness, and silence, they "viewed the remains." Conferences proceeded, then, to decide how the picture could be saved from its own obvious weaknesses by titanic exploitation, high pressure salesmanship. Result: Go through the press books of a season's product and they all read alike—same superlatives, same ideas for ballyhoo, same kind of publicity stills, same old bunk.

The Parade Had Passed

This is no particular reflection upon the ability of the men who wrote the copy, designed the advertising, or the paper. In fact, the very shots, still or otherwise, which might have permitted them to do something original, were never made. The same is true as to copy material. In Hollywood, the parade had passed, the cast scattered to the four winds, the boys in the publicity department were knee deep in the next job.

The new plan is to have men who understand theatre exploitation, sales advertising, distribution, follow the product right through. Assisting them perhaps, if the plans develop, will be staffs of ad writers, layout artists, men with a definite knowledge of selling. Studio publicity men, as a general rule, do not know these things. It is their business to look after free publicity, to contact newspaper, magazine and trade press writers, supply them with "pieces for the paper" about production activities, contract personalities, send out news letters. They are designed to be information bureaus, not sales or advertising departments for finished product.

Under the new plan, let us assume the first draft of a script which is shortly to go into production is delivered to the head of this new exploitation department, a man who knows sales problems, exhibition problems. He reads it with the idea of discovering what, if anything, will sell in such a production. Also, he reads it with the idea of discovering what, if any, sales resistance the proposed picture may offer. Theoretically, then, if studio potentates keep off their high horses, he will go back to the supervisor, the production executive, the director, the scenarists, and offer his criticisms and comments. He may say the proposed cast has no selling value. He may indicate a belief that a certain sequence, if built up, would offer unusual exploitation values, but that it is no good as written. He listens to the slants of the men and women who have lived with the production to date, creating it on paper. He may become imbued with some of their enthusiasm, their understanding of what is being undertaken.

May Make Sketches from Life

Well, he then goes back to his office and begins to mull over the plans to sell it. He roughs out a complete campaign. By the time the picture gets into actual shooting, he has a lot of ideas about stills, about production stories, about material which can be used for one-sheets and 24-sheets. If he has a staff of artists, they can go to the sets, make sketches actually from life. He may, if he is smart, see that there is one way to sell this picture in New York, and quite another way to sell it in Des Moines. There are features of it which will appeal more strikingly to each type of customer. So he draws up not only one type of campaign, but possibly two or three, or more, shooting this material into the home office as fast as he can prepare it. He follows the cutting and assembly of the picture on the studio screens. He goes out to the first and subsequent previews to study audience reactions. There he may discover that audiences are keen upon some phase of the picture which hadn't struck him at all. He gets that into the mails for New York. So, by the time the master print is shipped, the old wheels in New York are grinding apace, finishing up a lot of good, solid material already supplied by the studio exploitation department.

There is another reason, and a very important one, why this system has advantages under present conditions. It used to be that under ordinary routine a production could be delivered in New York well in advance of its release date. There was ample time to prepare the exploitation and advertising campaigns after it arrived in the home office. Not so today. With money scarce, negative investments being kept down absolutely to bed rock, there is often a last minute panic to meet release dates.

Whitbeck Possibly Originator

Frank Whitbeck, who has exploited and sold everything from a medicine show to an Eleven-dollar Hollywood Premiere, is possibly the pioneer of this new development. He worked on it first at Universal. Now he is at Paramount. It is doubtful if anyone will deny that Mr. Whitbeck knows show-business. He probably can tell you the names and locations of all the theatres in your home town, and what kind of business they have done the past twenty years.

Meehan Warns Against Interference from Home Office Forces in Move to Provide Material That Will Sell Film

Recently, MGM decided to give this system a thorough test. So it detached perspicacious Pete Smith from all other duties, gave him carte blanche to organize a department designed to supply Howard Dietz and the other New York brethren with the best sales material, and to render his advice to production executives in advance of shooting so that pictures may be built with sales ideas in mind. A suite of offices separate from the regular publicity department has been fitted up, and the nucleus of an advertising staff engaged. One of Pete's first jobs was to handle the campaign for the opening of "Grand Hotel" at the Chinese in Hollywood.

Recently Warner-First National sent out a New York advertising representative in the person of George Bilson, who is undertaking to supervise trailer production and provide sales campaign ideas for the New York home office of that company. George Thomas and his staff continue to function as the studio publicity department, but Mr. Bilson is free to concentrate strictly on sales ideas. He carries the title of western advertising manager.

New Use of Trailers

Trailers are regarded as very important sales adjuncts. In the past they have not always been given the attention they warranted. Not so long ago trailers often had to be made up from footage not used in the production. With sales and advertising management in the studios, it is easy enough to select and have shot, during production, the best possible material for trailers.

Other companies are considering, or already experimenting, along these lines. All are watching with interest what is being developed by men like Messrs. Whitbeck, Smith and Bilson. It is generally believed that productions with better sales values, and advertising campaigns with more finish and originality are possible under such cooperative arrangements between New York and the studios.

One thing, hinted at the beginning, may cripple the effectiveness of these efforts. If the boys in New York get to feeling that the West Coast gang may supersede them or cut down their importance, the old submarining may start. There have been slight indications of such possibilities already. Possibly the economic pressure of the times will prevent any tendency not to give the experiment a genuine trial.

RKO'S NEW POLICIES RAISE THEATRES' NET

Circuit Reports Increased Profits at Nine Widely Separated Houses; Summer Contests Are Planned

Revised policies adopted within the past five to eight weeks in RKO theatres across the country are showing a uniform increase in operating profits, according to figures received from nine widely separated theatres in a coast to coast survey of the circuit now being conducted by the home office. In some cases the increased profits were shown in spite of lowered attendance and grosses which followed upon the changes of policy.

The new operating policies included elimination of vaudeville from some theatres, a downward revision of admission scales, changes in advertising methods which permitted economies, elimination of costly features from programs and additional general economies in operations. As a result of the changes, the net profit of nine houses selected at random showed an increase of several thousand dollars. Many others were placed in a healthful state of affairs after having been in the red for several months.

What the Theatres Showed

Initial results of the changed policies as shown by RKO's coast to coast survey reveal that the Jefferson theatre, New York, increased its net profit over $3,000, despite a $1,200 lower gross, and the Franklin, New York, with a $700 lower gross, had a net increase of more than $2,500. At San Francisco, the Orpheum's net was boosted $1,600; the Spokane, Washington, $1,200, and Keith's, Washington, D. C., $5,000. The Riverside, at Milwaukee, with a gross only slightly better than half its customary average, increased net profits $1,500. With a similar gross situation prevailing at the Emboyd, Fort Wayne, the theatre showed a net increase of over $800, and the Keith's net went up $700, despite a slight drop in attendance and 25 per cent in gross.

The Chester theatre, New York, increased its net more than $2,400, while its gross declined about $1,000, and the Royal, New York, showed a net increase of nearly $1,300.

Maintenance of the favorable net improvement throughout the summer will be aided by the participation of all RKO theatres in a series of national contests. Plans have been perfected for an RKO theatre tieup with Tower Publications which, during August, will select "the most beautiful woman in America." The contest will be carried on in 1,300,000 copies of Tower Publications, and the winner will be given a lifetime annuity through an insurance company. In September, the circuit's theatres will participate in a Popularity Contest. RKO theatres are now participating in Opportunity contests for the discovery of new stage and screen talent, and further summer exploitation will be focused on a Greater Entertainment Season, marking the arrival of new season product.

Tied In With Radio City Publicity

All RKO theatres are being tied in with Radio City publicity, and division theatre managers are being provided with Radio City photographic enlargements, new pictures and publicity stories for dissemination to the public through local theatres.

Brooklyn and New Jersey independent exhibitors were advised late last week by Nate Blumberg and Harold B. Franklin, of RKO, that the circuit would not introduce triple features in New Jersey and that triple feature programs as now conducted one night a week in RKO Brooklyn houses would be abolished after June 12. Describing triple feature programs as "an evil which should be eliminated," Mr. Franklin said only an unusual volume of advance bookings prevented immediate elimination of the policy. The complaints of independent exhibitors were carried to the RKO executives by Rudy Sanders, president of the Brooklyn Theatre Owners, and Leon Rosenblatt, of Allied Theatre Owners of New Jersey.

Few theatre closings, other than the customary seasonal shutdowns, are contemplated by RKO for the summer, Franklin declared. A flexible, individual theatre policy will be followed in every instance, he said, and the status and prospects of each theatre will be considered before a decision is made. No general formula to be applied indiscriminately to the entire circuit will be sought, he said. In some instances, RKO will merely pare overhead further and continue theatres in operation throughout the summer, where the situation seems to warrant, and in others the circuit will increase show value wherever this course appears advisable.

Stage Hands and Operators Opening Convention June 6

More than 1,000 stage hands and projectionists from every state and from Canada are expected to be in attendance when the 31st bi-annual convention of the International Alliance of Theatrical Stage Employees and Moving Picture Machine Operators opens at Columbus, Ohio, on June 6. The convention will continue throughout the week, closing June 11 with the annual election of officers.

William C. Elliott, of Cincinnati, president of the organization, arrived in Columbus early this week with a delegation from the New York headquarters of the IATSE, which included Fred J. Dempsey, of Boston, general secretary-treasurer, and John P. Nick, of St. Louis, first vice president. The officials sat in at pre-convention district meetings which opened Thursday, at the Neil House, convention headquarters.

Briskin Appointed General Manager of Columbia Studio

Sam Briskin was appointed general manager of the Columbia studio on the Coast this week. He will act in that capacity as an assistant to Harry Cohn, in charge of production.

Mr. Cohn will return to the home office in New York early next week, from the Columbia sales convention on the Coast. Walter Wanger, vice president, will remain at the studio for four months.

Paramount Debenture Payment

Late last week, Paramount Publix deposited with the Chase National Bank as trustee, funds to pay the coupons which were due June 1 on its issue of 6 per cent debentures. The company also announced that it had delivered to Chase for cancellation $750,000 par value of its 5½ per debentures for cancellation as of June 1 in fulfillment of the sinking fund requirements on that issue.

GET THIS STAMP ON YOU!

There are certain exhibitors in this country who have the Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer stamp. They walk around bearing THE TRADE-MARK OF SUCCESS! They've got that M-G-M spirit of pep and prosperity just as surely as if they had the trade-mark stamped on them!

And there's a LOOK in their EYE that says:

Frankly and fearlessly Leo talks to you, and urges you to read every word of what follows:

TO HELL WITH HOOEY, TOO!

M-G-M doesn't need to cover precious white space with smoke screens. Let's face facts in the industry today! We're proud—and rightfully proud—of our product record of 1931-32! We're not cocky about it, any more than we were cocky last year or the years before when our record was equally good. If M-G-M had started to rest on its laurels at any time in the past couple of years, we would have gone the way of all flesh! But we just stuck to our jobs and worked hard—darned hard—to maintain M-G-M's high position in the industry!

The Bunk Season Is Here!

M-G-M came to you straightforwardly at so-called "Announcement Time" a year ago and stated that we wouldn't join the annual chorus of bull, we wouldn't go off half-cocked about what we were going to do during a long twelve-month ahead! Exhibitors of M-G-M are well-satisfied with what we delivered, they'd rather get results on the screen than promises in an annual announcement. Again this year M-G-M calls your attention to the fact that the prospectuses of one company look just about the same as those of another company. The artists, printers and ad writers are all okay!

"PROSPERITY" with DRESSLER-MORAN is just around the corner. (Watch for date!)

After The Bull Is Over!

It's what happens during the course of the year that matters. You can't show those pretty announcements on the screen. Those annual plans go to Hollywood and then it's up to the studio!

It's a shame that upheavals have to take place because it takes so long for readjustments and the product is bound to suffer! That's why it's a pleasure to watch that M-G-M studio function. Full steam ahead! No waste motion for political adjustments, new bosses, upset morale! The personnel of M-G-M in its Home Office and in its Studio is the same live-wire crew that has given theatres rent-paying, profit-yielding product since 1924! Experts in each of their fields, working together happily, enthusiastically, to make the success for exhibitors that means the success for their company! When somebody tells you there's a new set-up at that place and the other—remember this is no time to gamble on prospects. This is a time when you play safe!

The most frequently used letters in the alphabet.

Personalities Pay!

During tough times it becomes more apparent than ever that you're licked if you haven't got STAR names! Frantic efforts are being made in the industry to build up names—but in all honesty M-G-M's years of Star-Building have given us the edge by miles. When, if ever, can this Galaxy of Names be approached (just to mention a few): MARIE DRESSLER, NORMA SHEARER, GRETA GARBO, JOAN CRAWFORD, WALLACE BEERY, JOHN BARRYMORE, MARION DAVIES, CLARK GABLE, ROBERT

IT HAPPENS ONCE EVERY YEAR!

With scarcely a warning! With hardly a word of advance notice! Every year without fail one motion picture slips out of Hollywood unheralded, to win world fame, suddenly, overnight to become the talk of all motion picture audiences!

The underground reports from Hollywood whispered that Ramon Novarro in "Huddle" should be watched! Those who saw it in advance showings predicted it would be 1932's Surprise Screen Hit!

And now that prophecy has come true! This glorious motion picture is here. Ramon Novarro at the height of his career portraying a boy fighting snobbery and wealth at college, climbing to the top, living, loving, winning your heart every minute of it! What makes great motion picture entertainment? Action, thrills, beauty, romance, luxury, laughter? Yes, they're all here, with that extra something that reaches into your heart and tells you "Here is something grand!"

We predict it will be America's choice!

Think This Over!

Years ago, prior to the entrance of M-G-M in the industry, the film company which was then on top was subject to all kinds of petty criticism and abuse. It is always the case. But the motion picture industry is interested in one thing only, and demands one thing only—the best available product! It will interest film circles this year to know that the circulation of M-G-M pictures in the season 1931-32 will exceed its circulation of 1930-31. Think that over!

Our Obligation!

We sincerely believe we have an obligation to the industry. M-G-M pictures have been bought as a form of insurance this past year and they have fulfilled their obligation to keep many theatres open. It has been a sacred trust, we welcomed that trust. We did not fail our trust! Many a man in this business has said: "I wonder what would have happened without M-G-M's remarkable support at the box-office!" The same question may be asked about the year to come!

"I CUT MY NOSE TO SPITE MY FACE!"

A few exhibitors who allowed their competition to get M-G-M this year will think it over more carefully in 1932-33.

MARIE DRESSLER-POLLY MORAN in "Prosperity." A life-saver! For this time of year especially!

GRETA GARBO in "As You Desire Me." It's BIG!

Your Obligation!

Has the industry a reciprocal obligation to M-G-M? We sincerely believe it has a community interest in helping us to bring to the screen the important attractions, the Big Entertainments, the Big Stars of great appeal that have stimulated attendance! We can't do it alone. We need your sympathy. We need your co-operation. We have received that in abundance from exhibitors who recognize M-G-M's life-sustaining position in this industry and are willing to enthusiastically go along with it!

A CHART! What's an ad without a chart!

When business in 1932 beats business in 1931, that's news! Here's a survey of 203 theatres playing M-G-M product in 95 situations. The average business done in those theatres in 1931 is shown by the center line marked "AVERAGE BUSINESS IN 1931". The other line shows business done by those same theatres playing M-G-M product for three months of 1932. Are you among the lucky boys who collaborated with M-G-M in licking depression? Will you be among them next year, too? And how!

Another Obligation!

The people of America have a habit of getting the best, no matter what type of merchandise it may be. A theatre may be free of competition, but it is never free of the obligation to give its patrons Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer Stars, Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer Hits—the entertainment that is talked about, written about and which eventually is sought out by ticket-buyers! The theatre which is in this business to stay will never say: "The public be damned!"

BRITISH DISTRIBUTORS RESISTING EXHIBITOR PLEA TO CUT RENTALS

Promise to Afford Relief in Individual Cases, but Stand Pat Against General Reduction of Their Prices

By W. H. MOORING, London

Those British exhibitors who had anticipated that the most recent meetings of the Joint-Trading Committee, set up by the Cinematograph Exhibitors Association and the Kinematograph Renters Society, would lead to almost immediate agreement on a general policy of lower rentals, are to be disappointed.

The Joint Trading Committee has had a number of sittings, but the distributors (KRS) have blandly intimated that they are not prepared to go any further in their efforts to meet exhibitors, in regard to rental terms, than they offered three months back. At that time the exhibitors, through the CEA, were optimistic enough to try for a reduction of film hiring terms, from an average level then standing at round about 33⅓ per cent, to something approximating 25 per cent.

Distributors Adamant

But the distributors were adamant, and merely offered to afford relief in individual cases where rental terms under sharing arrangements were proved excessive on submission to the Committee. This in effect is the stand which the distributors indicate they will maintain.

The CEA General Council last week heard its own committee's report on the results of the latest efforts. This report concludes with the significant remark that "this is the most that the KRS will be disposed to offer as a contribution from itself as representing the renters. If this offer is again rejected (the CEA rejected similar proposals three months ago), the only steps open will be for the General Council to issue a series of recommendations to its members and the utility of such recommendations will depend entirely upon whether members are disposed to support them."

This means in short that the American distributors here, no doubt under the influence of adverse exchanges, are compelled to hold out for present rental terms. Exhibitors can now see that the distributors as individual traders are further hit by depression in just the same ratio as the theatres, and that they have given their last word in concessions. In addition, exhibitors recognize that the distributors operating through the KRS have leadership.

Unless the members of the CEA are ready to take the present proposals as final, the exhibitor organization has one hope—a very fragile one—left.

Could Issue Recommendations

It can issue recommendations to its members according to local conditions. In some areas it might advise that all American films should be given "a booking holiday for two or three months," in others that exhibitors should agree locally not to book certain selected product at more than so and so much per cent.

REAL SELLING!

Stuart Webb, president of Pathe Exchange, Inc., week-ends on the Maine coast. This week he is back from Bath with a tale he cites as illustrating the new intensity of selling, resultant from the endeavor of all business to pull out of "the depression."

It appears that Mr. Wingate Cram of Bath, incidentally of the Bangor & Aroostook Railway Crams, received a telephone call, saying:

"This is The Telephone Company, Mr. Cram. We have made a survey of your residence and find that if you had an additional instrument on your third floor it would save your family and servants many steps a day and improve the operation of the household."

"Who did you say this is?" asked Mr. Cram in calm Yankee politeness.

"The Telephone Company, sir."

"And you have made a survey of the third floor of my residence and checked up where everybody sleeps?"

"Yes, sir, naturally we have to make a study before we can make a recommendation."

"How interesting, how dreadfully interesting," Mr. Cram commented.

"It's Telephone Drive Week, Mr. Cram. May we not enter your order for the additional instrument?"

"Well, well!" Which was an exclamation from the conservative Mr. Cram. "Business is up and coming. Last week the butcher looked in our garbage and then wrote to me that we were eating too much fish—but I hardly expected this from the Telephone company."

---

In every such case the exhibitors' cause would most likely suffer at the hands of exhibitors, because, whether due to uncontrollable numbers or lack of morale, the exhibitors' movement in this country has not shown a great aptitude for unity and loyalty as expressed through the cooperative weapon. Two per cent double crossers can wreck any exhibitors' cooperative plan.

It seems most likely at this stage that the distributors have resisted successfully the exhibitors' demand for easier film prices.

Circuit Cinemas Cutting Admissions

The General Council of the CEA has had laid before it, by the Manchester Branch of the organization, a complaint that certain circuit theatres are operating on a policy of second matinees!

Awhile back third shows resulted in a good deal of general criticism, but conditions in many of the industrial districts were so bad as to justify low prices in preference to empty seats. So it passed.

Circuit Theatres Reduce Admission Prices, Others Protest; Government Drops Policy of Sidestepping Sunday Issue

Now, however, we are treated to the spectacle of a producer-renter-theatre concern, starting in some of its industrial areas adult admissions at the usual Saturday Kiddies Matinee price of two pence.

Independent theatre owners are alarmed and annoyed, and the result of disclosures will be hot protestations from the CEA to the circuit concern starting all the rot.

Government Stops Sidestepping Sunday Opening Issue

After a good deal of wasted time and effort the Government has been compelled to abandon its decision not to take active part in framing new legislation to clarify the present Sunday entertainments situation.

Previously it was announced that the House of Commons would be left to evolve the new regulations which must be framed before next October. But deadlock resulted because the House of Commons committee appointed to consider a bill (which passed its second reading before the full House by the narrow majority of 18) was constituted as to 50 per cent against and 50 per cent for, with the chairman turning the scales every time an amendment went forward.

The farce was carried to a point where the whole work of the committee collapsed, and now Major Stanley of the Home Office indicates that the Government will take a hand.

But they are not likely to flout the Sabbatarian movement, which by its superior propaganda has created a widespread impression that it has bulk public support: they will not go further than to legalize Sunday shows where these were previously given, for many years, illegally. Areas where change in public opinion results in new demand for Sunday entertainment, but where Sunday shows have not before been allowed, will first have to take a local plebiscite, and if that shows a majority in favor, they will have to ask Parliament for a small private bill, permitting them to open Sundays.

Here and There

Here is perhaps an indication of the times, and of the passing of the smaller theatre of yesterdays. Four cinemas sold under the hammer in Manchester last week realized £1,745. They were the Plaza Prestwich; the Regent, Higher Broughton; the Plaza, Rochdale Road, Manchester, and the Regent in the same thoroughfare.

The new Gaumont studios to be opened soon at Shepherd's Bush, London, will first produce "Rome Express," a story told on a transcontinental express.

THE NEWEST PICTURES

Ann Harding's Latest Leaves Her Bound for Reno! Sylvia Sidney Does Lovely Suffering

By LEO MEEHAN

By coincidence, the fade-out of Ann Harding's new picture, "Westward Passage," leaves her starting for Reno to get a divorce! You probably recall she just had one there in real life, thank you.

The Harding production, one of the last to carry the Rooster brand, is possibly the most important of the week among the new pictures tried out in Hollywood. Hiss Harding has dropped that severe Grecian hairdress in favor of waviness and fluffiness; and she is very beautiful. She should be quite appealing to all the Harding fans.

Especially noteworthy is the leading man, Laurence Olivier, whom Radio is bringing to the front strongly in next season's program. He does a grand job, and it appears likely that he will land in the front line after this one gets around. He looks a lot like Ronald Colman; acts like Freddy March—which is pretty good, eh?

The story is pretty thin stuff about a young couple who quarrel so much they get divorced. The wife remarries, only to find she still loves No. 1. On a boat trip back from Europe (westward passage) he sells her the idea of quitting No. 2 to remarry her first love. Snappy dialogue and fine performances by the leads, by Irving Pichel, Zasu Pitts and several others, help to bolster it up. Not to be sold to the children.

Paramount tried out "Merrily We Go to Hell," with Fredric March leading the procession. Like "Westward Passage" this is another drama of domestic life, with a young couple trying to stay together in spite of the husband's passion for spirits frumenti. Sylvia Sidney does some lovely suffering as the wife. There is lots of drinking in a gay, merrily-we-go-to-hell tempo. March makes even his wettest moments amusing. Skeets Gallagher helps the gaiety, too. Doctor Hays may operate on the title before it gets to you; so we hear out this way. Anyway, don't give a W.C.T.U. matinee with this attraction.

Principal Pictures (Sol Lesser) showed the first of a series of three reelers he proposes to produce for double-billing purposes. It is called "Island of Perils" and was shot on the Faroe Islands, which lie about midway between Iceland and Norway in the frigidaire belt. It has a lot of thrills, a nice little romance between a native boy and girl, and combines travel, education and entertainment.

Soviet Russia with its free love, free divorce and compulsory atheism provides the background for the modern story of Paramount's "Forgotten Commandments." Into this has been set a cut-back, retrospective sequence from the great DeMille epic, "Ten Commandments." This reveals those memorable scenes when the Pharaoh pursued the Israelites, who escaped miraculously through the opening of the Red Sea. Those who never have seen these spectacular scenes should thoroughly enjoy them, and the oldtimers will be pleased to see Theodore Roberts of happy memory once again. Notable in the modern story, which is pretty ultra, is the initial appearance of a new Paramount prospect for stardom, Sari Maritza. She is voluptuously beautiful, a very competent young actress, and looks very promising. The great Russian social experiment, like our own "noble experiment" with pantry drinking, is becoming increasingly popular as a theme for pictures, it seems.

Many Entries for Film Daily Tourney

Numerous entries and many prizes have been received for the semi-annual Eastern Film Golf Tournament, sponsored by Film Daily, which will be held at Fenimore Golf and Country Club, White Plains, New York, on Wednesday, June 22. The entries for the tournament are limited to 160 participants.

An innovation at this year's outing will be the formation of special teams to compete for designated prizes. One such team will be known as the "vice-presidents in good standing," and will be comprised of vice-presidents of film companies only, it was said.

The committee in charge of the tournament consists of Al Lichtman, Lee A. Ochs, Bruce Gallup, Jack Alicoate, Ed Finney, Red Kann and Don Mersereau.

Roxy, Beck Due Sunday

Martin Beck and S. L. "Roxy" Rothafel, RKO vaudeville executives, are due in New York, Sunday, having concluded an inspection tour of European theatres.

New Move Awaited To Close Loew Suit

Further efforts to effect an out of court settlement of the monopoly action filed against Loew's, Inc., the Cleveland Film Board of Trade and distributors, by Cleveland exhibitors, were scheduled to be made this week. Will Horwitz, attorney for the exhibitor complainants, conferred with litigants in New York, last week and returned to Cleveland to further discuss a settlement.

Mr. Horwitz, according to Cleveland advices, is also engaged in the preparation of what he asserts is a legal plan for the enforcement of arbitration. Public announcement of the Horwitz plan is expected soon in Cleveland.

Laemmle, Jr., in New York

Carl Laemmle, Jr., arrived in New York this week, following a visit with his father, who is recuperating from a recent operation at a Baltimore hospital. He will remain at the home office until the president of Universal is able to undertake the train journey back to the Coast.

MPTA of Kansas Names Van Hyning For a Third Term

A vote of confidence was given E. Van Hyning, president, in his re-election for the third time at the convention of the MPTA of Kansas and Missouri in Topeka last week.

Several members of Allied from the Kansas-Missouri territory attended the convention and MPTA leaders consider their attendance and actions as a serious attempt to disrupt the sessions. It is understood that a member of Allied attempted to bring up for discussion the letter which Clifford L. Niles, president of the Iowa-Nebraska Allied unit, wrote recently to Van Hyning demanding a list of independents "who favored a continuance of zoning and protection." Van Hyning explained at the session that he intended to reply as soon as possible.

A resolution presented to the convention endorsing the Brookhart bill was decisively defeated after a sharp debate. Endorsement of Van Hyning's move for a uniform zoning and protection plan was made by resolution adopted unanimously. Protest of a federal admission tax was embodied in a resolution.

Officers were re-elected, as follows: president, E. Van Hyning, Iola, Kas.; vice-president, John C. Stapel, Rockport, Mo.; treasurer, Jay Means, Kansas City; secretary, Mrs. June Medcalf, Kansas City. Jay Means and Sam Blair of Belleville, Kas., are two new members of the board of directors. The others, re-elected, are: for Kansas, Harry A. McClure, Topeka; R. R. Biechele, Kansas City, Kas.; C. L. McVey, Herington; O. K. Mason, Hoisington; E. B. Danielson, Russel; A. R. Zimmer, Dodge City; and Missouri, Barney Dubinsky, Kansas City, C. H. Burkey, Kansas City; A. E. Bowman, Nevada; C. A. Shcultz and A. F. Baker, Kansas City, and J. C. Stapel.

The principal speaker was M. A. Lightman, president of the MPTOA. Without mentioning Allied by name, he defended the MPTA against the onslaughts of the members of that organization.

RKO Drops District Theatre Managers for Greater N.Y.

RKO district theatre managers in the Greater New York territory were eliminated this week in a move affecting four men who formerly held such posts. Louis Goldberg, one of the four, was promoted to divisional manager; Joseph Di Lorenzo, another former district manager, was assigned to Proctor's theatre, New Rochelle, N. Y.; Harry A. Federman and E. P. Lenihan, the other two, remain unassigned.

Theatre, In Suing Paramount, Charges Breach of Contract

The Temple Theatre, Birmingham, Ala., has filed suit for $10,000 damages against the Paramount-Publix Corporation in circuit court, alleging breach of contract.

Attorneys for the plaintiff claim Paramount entered into an agreement on December 28, 1931, to furnish pictures to April 29, 1932.

THE CAMERA REPORTS

FROM EUROPE. Lilian Harvey, an English girl who achieved cinema fame in German pictures, and who has been signed by Fox, to arrive this fall.

OFF TO COOL COUNTRY. (Below) Dr. Arnold Fanck, the European scientist and arctic explorer, who heads the Universal expedition to Greenland to make "S. O. S. Iceberg." Fanck is shown with Elizabeth Kind, his secretary and fiancee.

IN TITLE ROLE. Conrad Nagel, one of the earliest successes in talking pictures, who has been signed by World Wide for the lead in "The Man Called Back."

MADE COLONEL. (Below) Ann Harding, RKO Radio star, with R. Dean Warner and Lawrence R. Gibbs, who appointed her colonel of Rainbow Division Veterans.

SIGNED. (Below) Patricia Ellis, who, they say, is only 17, with her mother upon their arrival in Hollywood. Miss Ellis has been signed by Warner Brothers.

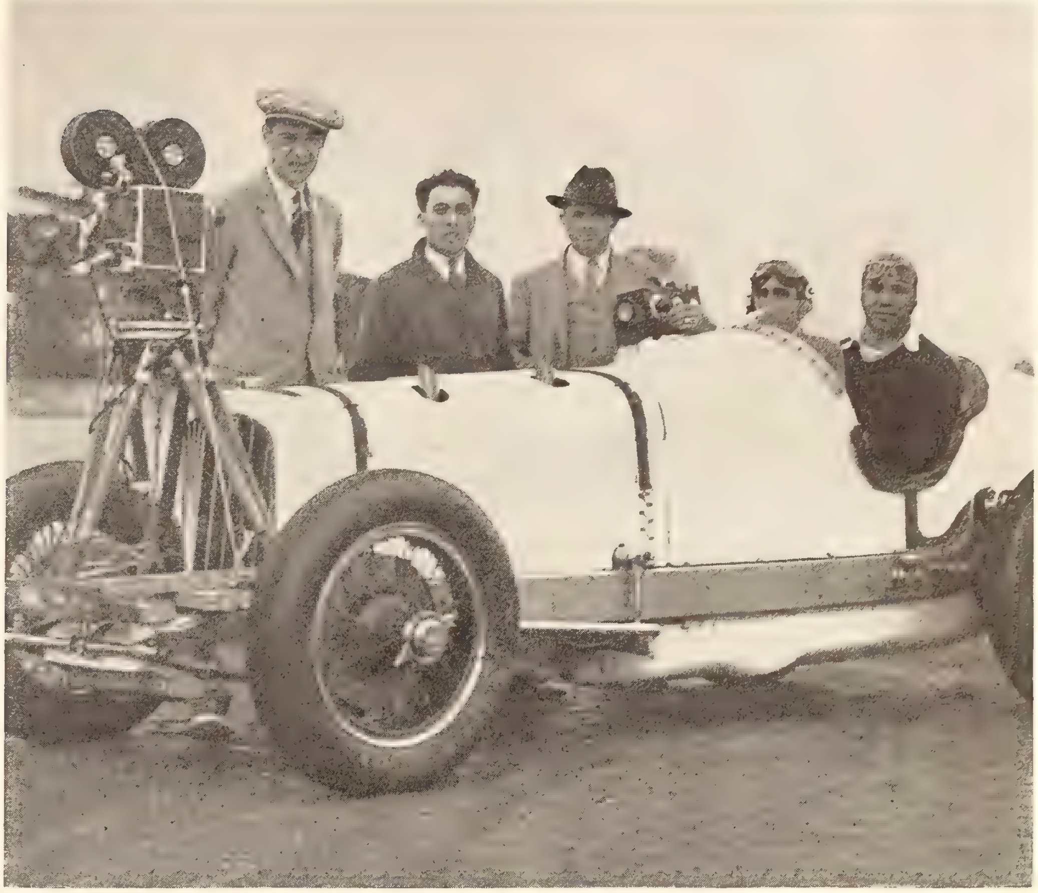
SUNSET OVER THE PACIFIC. An entrancing bit of seascape, plus a lot of sand, the monotony of which is relieved by Ruth Hall, Warner Brothers player, in a wistful mood as the day (as days will) starts toward another tomorrow.

NEWCOMER. Margaret Perry, one of the more recent arrivals in pictures. Stage star, her first screen role will be in M-G-M-'s "New Morals for Old."

STUDIO CALL. Getting in touch with the reality of the outside world, Lyle Talbot is thus found snitching a moment or two from screen fictions at Warner Brothers, which company recently signed him to a long-term contract.

ON THE FENCE. Which usually means that you are on neither this side nor that side of the question. Not so in this case, for they are the star and director working together on a production—"Doctor X," a First National picture. The one, Lee Tracy; the other, Michael Curtiz.

IN NEW ROLE. Lillian Bond, signed by Universal to a long-term contract following her work in "The Old Dark House." She has been cast in "Air Mail."



ALL SET FOR THRILLS. Wherever there is anything doing worth doing, there is today's delineator of life—as it passes, and no matter how swiftly. Shown at the Indianapolis auto classic is a Fox newsreel crew composed of Bill Storz, E. Montemurro, Tom Cummiskey and A. Tice (plus Joe Russo, racer).

PLAYTIME BUDDIES. Although they work at different studios, they're pals, are Douglas Fairbanks, Jr., and Robert Montgomery. Fairbanks, Warner star, recently got a vacation, whereupon he learned that Montgomery could arrange something similar. So here they are, leaving for the oceanside.

MAN O' STEEL. And the meaning doesn't change when you add an "e" to the word. This study of Bob Steele is interpretative of his newest role, as the star of "The Man from Hell's Edges," one of his series of World Wide Westerns.

Asks Relief In Copyright Laws

The Allied Theatre Owners of Iowa and Nebraska recently has been conducting a survey of conditions in the territory to determine which exhibitors have been oversold and must have film rentals adjusted in order to remain open during the summer.

The questionaire sent to theatre men requests the following information:

1. What percentage of your gross receipts do your feature pictures average in cost? ..........
2. Do you feel you are oversold? ........ If so, state by which company and why. ........................ ........................................
3. Have you been refused any recent requests for adjustment? ........
4. If you do not obtain a reduction, will you be able to stay open this summer? ........
5. Do you find the 25-30-35% policy of Metro profitable in view of the superior quality of these pictures? ........
6. Do you feel Allied is justified in offering to work out an arbitration system with the producers in the Omaha and Des Moines territory? ........
7. In the event producers refuse to cooperate on arbitration and insist on strict performance of contracts regardless of the depression, do you feel Allied is justified in employing legal counsel to assist exhibitors in adjusting contracts? ........
8. Do you favor the organization of a relief committee for the purpose of helping distressed exhibitors? ........

Small, Goetz Plans Indefinite

No definite schedule is planned by Edward Small and Harry Goetz, who have formed a producing organization under the name of Reliance Pictures. The first films will be "If Christ Came to Chicago," from a book by William T. Stead, and "Scotch and Soda," with Ernest Torrence, George Sidney.

Allied Unit Makes Conditions Survey

The necessity for relief from the "oppressive terms" of copyright laws and liberalization of anti-trust laws was stressed by John W. Van Allen, general manager of the Radio Manufacturers' Association, speaking before the radio convention in Chicago last week.

Relief from arbitrary and unreasonable restrictions concerning permission for use of musical compositions, drama and literary works should be contained in any new copyright legislation, Mr. Allen contended. Concerning the anti-trust laws, Mr. Allen urged that the manufacturer be permitted to guard against indiscriminate and destructive price cutting in his own products. Conditions within the radio industry may be seriously affected by the results of the current government suit against numerous radio companies for alleged violation of anti-trust laws, the executive declared.

Named Sales Manager

M. E. Morey has been appointed sales manager of the Hollywood Films Corporation, Boston distributor for Monogram. Mr. Morey will have supervision over the Boston and New Haven territories.

Harold Flavin Marries

Harold Flavin, handling publicity for Mayfair Pictures, and Helen McCormick, secretary to George Weeks, were married on Monday at Albany.

OPTIMISM AND HAPPY ENDINGS

The happy ending seems imperative for the American people, asserts George Cukor, now directing for RKO on the Coast. It is due to the irrepressible optimism which is an inherent and apparently indestructible feature of the American temperament, he declares.

"I had in mind the production of a European story for the screen when I first arrived in Hollywood, but I have since been convinced that it would be ill advised," said Cukor. "Not that the American is not appreciative of the finest values in literature and drama, but his optimistic outlook cannot relish the somber shades that life frequently takes on. It is a fine equipment for human beings to have, and I can't conceive of any sort of depression that would master the people of this country for any length of time."

Amusements to Recover First, Says Woolams, Fox Executive

The amusement industry, though hit as hard as any other in the current economic crisis, will be one of the first to recover, in the opinion of Leonard A. Woolams, vice president of Fox Film, expressed at Seattle last week.

Woolams bases his belief on the fact the amusement industry is a fundamental business, since people must be amused and entertained. The executive is on a tour of inspection of the Pacific Coast activities of the company, accompanying Charles Skouras, operating manager for Fox West Coast.

Emma Otero, Cuban Soprano, To Star in a Shorts Series

Miss Emma Otero, famous Cuban coloratura soprano, who has the distinction of being rated as the second Galli-Curci, has been signed to a motion picture contract by A. R. Acosta, vice president and treasurer of Theodore Charlton, Inc., an independent producing company. Miss Otero will be starred in a series of featurettes entitled "Romantic Adventures in Song," being prepared by George Reid and directed by Lem F. Kennedy.

The series will be produced under the personal supervision of Theodore Charlton, president of the producing organization.

Joseph Jackson Drowned

Joseph Jackson, 38, well known screen writer and playwright, was drowned off Laguna Beach, Calif., last Thursday, when caught in the heavy surf. He is survived by his wife, the former Ethel Shannon, screen actress, and a young son.

Studying Stage Talent

Rufus Le Maire, casting director of the Warner-First National Coast studio, is in New York to survey stage talent with a view to increasing the list of Warner name and character players.

Hal Horne in from Coast

Hal Horne, director of publicity and advertising for United Artists, has returned to the home office, after a stay on the Coast looking into the production situation.

ASIDES & INTERLUDES

By JAMES CUNNINGHAM

SOMEONE once said that competition is the life of trade and industry. To this we might add the qualifying word: "SOMETIMES."

A few weeks ago the management of one of Detroit's downtown theatres announced it would give away every week a new car of a well known make. Two nearby theatres, Fox's Detroit and the Cohen brothers' Hollywood, suffered accordingly until Bill Rainer, Fox manager, took an airplane trip during which he made the acquaintance of the general sales manager of the Rockne automobile.

At the conclusion of the trip Rainer sold the sales manager an idea. The Rockne needed exploitation in Detroit—home of Ford and other automobile interests, and he would be glad to give Mr. Rainer 40 Rocknes, free, in return for advertising and publicity.

The Fox manager originally had objected to the car give-away at the house of his competitor, but inasmuch as that management persisted in its philanthropic activities, Mr. Rainer agreed to the Rockne offer and proceeded to award four cars each week at the Detroit. Evidently the first house could not meet Rainer's offer to patrons, but the Cohen brothers, with their Hollywood theatre taking it "on the chin" from each end, decided to better the offers of the automobile donors by giving $500 in cash every Monday, Wednesday and Friday nights.

Someone once said that competition is the life of trade and industry. SOMETIMES.

Sime (Get-a-load-of-this) Silverman's "Variety" took a seemingly well-placed slap at MOTION PICTURE HERALD last week in a report of the arrest of a man known in the HERALD office as Frederick Craven. Craven is alleged by the police to be an international spy, named Frederick Joubert DuQuesne, who they claim is wanted for murder on the high seas, and a variety of other crimes. If the police are correct in their charges "Variety's" point is well taken. He was on the wrong staff.

In the pictorial section of the current issue of Jimmy Quirk's Photoplay Magazine appears a full-size picture of Ralph Bellamy, new screen hero, with the following caption:

> "It's great to be a screen hero," says grim-jawed Ralph Bellamy. "I wear good clothes, ride in fine cars and help beautiful ladies like Ruth Chatterton and Barbara Stanwyck out of difficult situations. I guess I'm a pretty lucky guy."

On the opposite page Wallace Beery is pictured in a pose which typifies contentment. The caption under his photo reads:

> "I wouldn't trade jobs with one of those pretty boys for all the beer in Germany," says Wally. "I can get to the studio five minutes before camera time. Don't have to put on make-up. Camera angles mean nothing. One side of this mug is just like the other. I've never said 'I love you, sweet cookie,' on the screen. And I hope I never do."

MERCHANDISING DE LUXE

Recently, the Vendome theatre in Detroit ceased operation, but the management failed to remove the posters and otherwise did nothing out front to indicate that the house was dark. Whereupon a youth broke into the theatre one night last week, connected the lights, placed a double feature sign in front of the house and advertised a big show for five cents. He hired two 16-year-old boys to act as ticket seller and usher and then waited for customers. They arrived, approximately 100 of them, and after waiting an hour or more for the performance to start they became suspicious and called in the police. In the meantime, the 1932 version of Barnum had scooped up the nickels and vanished.

All of which reminds Terry Ramsaye of an incident which took place in a town in Kentucky many years ago. While somewhat similar to the foregoing, the southern episode has never been known to have been equalled.

It appears that the townsfolk awoke one bright morning to find that the community had been papered extensively with 24-sheet posters—quite large for those days—on which appeared only the words "HE IS COMING!" in large display letters. Some few weeks later, when the countryside's curiosity had been aroused to a point almost uncontrollable, the billposters paid a second visit and sniped a date strip on the same boards. It read: "September 2—Opera House."

On the night of September 2 the darkened theatre was reopened and in no time the place was packed. When the curtain was raised at 8:30 it revealed a placard reading: "HE HAS GONE!"

From the New Yorker we learn that "the neatest journalistic coup of the week was made by the New Republic, which published a facsimilie of a telegram received by Sinclair Lewis from F. M. AT the testimonial dinner tendered to Joe (Paramount) Unger the other night, at the Astor Hotel in New York, we heard Louis Nizer, of the New York Film Board, publicly explain Al Lichtman's new distribution proposal as "a brand new plan to lose money."

Rudy Sanders, Brooklyn exhibitor, chairman and champion of testimonial dinners, and called by Mr. Nizer "The Rudy with a croon in his voice," was asked by the Film Board executive to explain why testimonial dinners are given. *Silence.

George Schaefer, Paramount sales executive, told the gathering that the industry will be tossed about in the most "turbulent" seas in the next three months and that it should be returned to the old leaders in the first place.

Charles L. O'Reilly, president of the New York Theatre Owners Chamber of Commerce, represented independent owners in the Metropolitan zone at the Unger dinner. He told the assemblage that the administration in Washington expects the motion picture industry to underwrite ten per cent of the Federal revenue bill, and in the next breath volunteered the information that theatre business is off 40 per cent.

Claude Saunders was on hand representing the Ross Checking Service. According to Mr. Nizer, "The Ross people have a representative at all motion picture dinners to keep an eye on exhibitors. They work on the theory that any guy who can afford $5 for dinner should be watched," he said.

Felix Feist, general sales manager of Metro, was introduced as the star in "There's No Percentage in Flat Rentals."

All applauded when they heard Roastmaster Nizer declare: "Stock prices do not indicate the strength of a film company."

Rudy Sanders paid glowing tribute to Joe Unger. He and Mr. Unger still are friends, even though Sanders did not buy Paramount product last year or the year before. "As a matter of fact, we're friends because Unger didn't sell me," Sanders declared.

Word has been received from the field by large circuits that the old "envelope and ten-dollar bill" short change racket is again being worked on theatre cashiers. Managers should warn their cashiers accordingly. Here's how it works:

The cashier at the box-office is asked to change 10 singles into a 10-dollar bill, and at the same time the "gentleman" presents an addressed envelope saying that he is going to mail the money. He then gives the cashier the single bills in return for a 10-dollar note, but upon counting the singles the clerk finds she has only nine singles. He recounts, finds she is right and apologizes profusely, after which the sealed envelope, supposedly with the 10-dollar bill enclosed, is left with the cashier while the chap goes across the street to get another single. The crook does not return and when the cashier opens the envelope she discovers only a blank sheet of paper.

Family Suitability

DOOMED BATTALION, THE Universal EXCELLENT

This is an amazing and beautiful picture. It is one more story of the Great War, and is of exceptional value because it dramatizes that section of fighting in the Austrian Tyrol of which we have heard very little. Tensely dramatic, the plot is laid among the snowy peaks on the Austrian-Italian border. Their fields of glaciers, sparkling ice and worlds of snow touching worlds of clouds, present the most unusual and inspiring photography which one could imagine. (Luis Trenker, Tala Birell, Victor Virnani.)

FAST COMPANIONS VERY GOOD
Universal

With all the flavor of the tanbark and the excitement of the race track for atmosphere, we find ourselves caught in the human interest and heart appealing story of a young boy who can bring romance to a sporting atmosphere. (James Gleason, Maureen O'Sullivan, Tom Brown.)

HUDDLE VERY GOOD
Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer

A boy goes to Yale on a scholarship, climbs to the heights of scholastic and athletic fame, triumphs against big odds in the football game of the year, and finally graduates and wins the girl he loves. Some of the love scenes spoil this picture for schools and juvenile audiences. (Ramon Navarro, Madge Evans.)

LAW OF THE NORTH GOOD
Monogram

The intrigue of a dishonorable Judge and a wrongly accused victim, with an appealing heart interest story, make this an acceptable and fine family audience picture.

MAN ABOUT TOWN GOOD
Fox

Two ex-army officers who are working for the Secret Service find themselves involved in a stirring plot of blackmail and jealousy. (Warner Baxter, Conway Tearle, Karen Morley.)

MAN FROM HELL'S EDGES, THE World Wide VERY GOOD

Bob Steele as the "Kid" is again a hard riding, straight shooting daredevil in another Western picture with the full complement of thrills and better than average suspense.

MASON OF THE MOUNTED GOOD
Monogram Pictures Corp.

The duties of a clever member of the Northwest Mounted Police lead him to the lair of troublesome horse thieves, and his cleverness in the frustration of their plans adds another notch to his gun. (Bill Cody, Nancy Drexel.)

NO GREATER LOVE GOOD
Columbia

Overly sentimental, but touching, somehow, this picture deals with the sorrows, self sacrifices and patience of the poor. (Alexander Carr, Betty Jane Graham, Dickie Moore.)

RADIO PATROL VERY GOOD
Universal

The dangers constantly faced by the police in the discharge of their duty provide material for an exciting story that is interwoven with a charming love story. (Robert Armstrong, June Clyde, Lila Lee.)

RIDERS OF DEATH VALLEY
Universal VERY GOOD

Tom Mix and his famous horse battle with death from thirst on desert sands.

RIDERS OF THE DESERT EXCELLENT
World Wide

Enthusiastic recommendations by reviewers stamp this Bob Steels offering as an outstanding Western.

RIDING TORNADO, THE GOOD
Columbia

As a champion broncho buster, Tim McCoy exhibits some excellent skill in riding. Stampedes, lightning, storms and horse thieves evidently have no terrors for him.

SKY BRIDE VERY GOOD
Paramount

This is the name given to a stunt flyer's plane. The plot deals with a day of reckless flying in which the plane of the hero collides with that of his pal, causing his friend's death. Interest never lags, so full of thrills and fast action are the periods of breathless excitement. (Richard Arlen, Jack Oakie.)

VIKING, THE VERY GOOD
J. D. Williams

One of the most interesting and thrilling pictures that has come to the screen is this epic of the sea. It is the filmed story of the vessel "The Viking," which went to its grave on the bottom of the Northern Seas after the explosion off Newfoundland on March 16, 1931, causing the death of Varick Frissell, the producer; his cameraman, A. E. Penrod, and a score of others. In order to make the story a romantic drama, a thin thread of plot has been spun through it, but long after the thrilling story theme is forgotten the grandeur of icebergs, the frozen beauty of the North and the staunch courage of the men will be remembered. This picture is a year old, but has been newly edited for general distribution.

Adult Suitability

ALMOST MARRIED VERY GOOD
Fox

Pretending to be married to a British army officer causes complications for a girl fleeing from Russia, but finally reunited her with her real husband. (Violet Hemming, William Kirkland, Ralph Bellamy.)

HONOR OF THE PRESS GOOD
Mayfair

The expose of a notorious band of criminals is accomplished with the aid of an honest cub reporter of the City Editor. (Edward Nugent, Rita LaRoy.)

SCANDAL FOR SALE VERY GOOD
Universal

Graphic action produces splended newspaper sequences, and without a semblance of preaching, moral values and lessons are driven home. (Charles Bickford, Pat O'Brien, Rose Hobart.)

SIN'S PAY DAY GOOD
Mayfair

Having saved a murderer from the death penalty, the defending lawyer eventually comes to the realization that he must share the responsibility for the criminal's subsequent crime. Mickey McGuire, as the small boy, "Chubby," is the center of the humor, as well as of the tragedy in this film, which is set against a gangster background and pictures the degradation of a gentleman and his eventual redemption. The director deserves credit for the restraint with which he has selected and used his material. (Dorothy Reviere, Forrest Stanley, Mickey McGuire.)

STRANGE CASE OF CLARA DEANE, THE Paramount GOOD

Here is an old familiar story, melodramatic and sentimental, but possessing plot interest and charm of character portrayal. (Wynne Gibson, Frances Dee, Pat O'Brien.)

DER UNSTERBLICHE LUMP GOOD
(The Immortal Vagabond)
Ufa

This is a romance of separated lovers who eventually are reconciled. Set amidst the magnificent splendor of the towering Alps in the Austrian Tyrol, the theme of this unusual film has been directed with skillful dramatic realism. (Gustav Froelich, Liane Haid, Hans Schlettow, Carl Gerhardt.)

VANISHING MEN GOOD
Monogram

The Western theme is speeded up to intrigue us into solving the problem that confronts the clever rider, Tom Tyler.

WOMAN IN ROOM 13, THE
Fox VERY GOOD

The plot of this melodrama depends for its suspense upon the device of withholding until the bitter end, the obvious word of explanation. A man and woman who are ideally happily married are made to suffer misunderstandings and jealousies, are dragged through a murder trial and brought to the brink of separation in order to satisfy the vengeful hate of the woman's former husband. (Elissa Landi, Ralph Bellamy, Neil Hamilton, Myrna Loy, Gilbert Roland.)

WORLD AND THE FLESH, THE
Paramount VERY GOOD

Handicapped by a meaningless title, this picture proves to be an eventful, swift moving story, dealing with the escape of a band of White Russians, and their capture by the Red sailors (on the Black Sea). It is unrelieved drama, the atmosphere tense with a sense of impending disaster, and always the sinister shadow of Sovietism looming over all. Recommended only for adults who enjoy ad-

Warner Action Filed By Koplar

Home office executives of Warner Brothers issued the following statement Wednesday afternoon:

"Warner Bros. Pictures, Inc., announces that it has just received information by telephone to the effect that one Harry Koplar, a stockholder resident in St. Louis, has filed an application for the appointment of a receiver in the federal court in Delaware. No copy of the petition has been received, but apparently the allegations are the same as those contained in two similar petitions heretofore filed by persons said to be associated with Mr. Koplar, in the state courts of Delaware.

"The first of the petitions so filed was dismissed some time ago. On the company's motion, the second petition has been set down for a hearing on Monday next. The attorneys for these petitioners have withdrawn from that case. The allegations of this, the third petition, will be answered immediately and the matter pressed to a hearing at the earliest possible moment. The company will be represented by Hugh M. Morris, formerly judge of the United States court in Delaware."

The bill seeks a receivership and an accounting and was filed on behalf of Koplar by the local law firm of Richard, Layton and Singer, of Wilmington. Koplar sets forth that he is the owner of 5,000 shares of the company's stock, of which 1,200 shares he said are outstanding in his own name.

The suit names Warner directors as individual defendants. A. M. Frunberg, a New York attorney and counsel for Koplar, said the suit was filed to preserve the company's assets for its security holders. Randolph Laughlin, of St. Louis, is associated with Frunberg in the case.

The bill asks that individual defendants be compelled to make accountings. They were charged with having exercised their power as officers to cause the corporation to pay out many millions of dollars in transactions in which they, or some of them, have personal interests and sought to benefit and did benefit at the corporation's expense. The bill further charges that individual defendants "misappropriated, through their own use and profit, money of the corporation, organized stock pools in combination with bankers and financiers and manipulated the stock of the corporation so that it soared in price and then dropped."

The defendants named are Harry M. Warner, Albert Warner, Jack Warner, Waddill Catchings, Harry Rudkin, Harold Bareford, Stanleigh P. Friedman, A. C. Thomas, Moe Mark, Morris Woolf and Samuel E. Morris.

Columbia Holds Second Meeting At Los Angeles

Studio officials and some 60 executives and members of the sales force representing the home office, the Western, Southern and Middle States branches, were present at the Ambassador Hotel, Los Angeles, when Columbia's West Coast convention opened for a four-day session on Tuesday. This was the second of two sales meetings. The first took place in Atlantic City, May 22-25.

Harry Cohn, president, and Walter Wanger, vice-president, officially opened the meeting which featured addresses by the two heads as well as by Charles Rosenzweig, sales manager; Sam Briskin,, studio general manager; Abe Montague, assistant to Jack Cohn; Rube Jackter, assistant sales manager; Jerry Safron, field sales supervisor; George Brown, director of advertising and publicity; Sam Moscow, Southern division manager; Lou Weinberg, circuit sales; Mortimer Wormser, comptroller; Joe McConville, New England division manager recently appointed home office representative, effective June 6; Hal Hode, sales promotion manager, and Henri Brunet, manager of exchange operations, and Milton Hannock.

"Not production curtailments which will lower quality, but pictures of such improved quality that they will start movie patrons stampeding to box office, is the present need of the industry," President Harry Cohn told sales executives in opening the convention. Mr. Cohn promised that Columbia Pictures for next season would be made with an outlay of capital exceeding any previous season.

Wiring from New York, Jack Cohn declared next season would see Columbia one of the biggest and strongest in the industry "because Columbia today stands free of all debt and our business is the best in our history."

Prosperity was the keynote sounded by Mr. Cohn. He said: "I cannot conceive any Columbia salesman talking depression. Columbia is prosperous and is preaching prosperity and if we preach it hard enough to all the people we meet we will cause this idea to radiate wherever we go. Gloomy talk may be all right for undertakers, but ours is essentially a business that brings relaxation and cheer to the whole world. We can't do that successfully on one hand if on the other we encourage depression talk."

SHOWMEN'S REVIEWS

This department deals with new product from the point of view of the exhibitor who is to purvey it to his own public

THE concept of this department is that the exhibitor is concerned not with any critic's idea of "how good?" or "how poor?" but rather with the question of precisely what the product is and what is to be done with it when and as it is played. The exhibitor, in general, is concerned with the special aspects of strength and of weakness in the product, its appeals and shortcomings, that he may adequately deal with it when he becomes its sponsor to his public. These "review" pages aim to aid the exhibitor as the retailer of the merchandise concerned.—THE EDITOR.

Bring 'Em Back Alive

(RKO-Van Beuren)

Jungle Picture

Unusually good photography is going to make the skeptics wonder whether all of this film was actually taken in the Malayan jungles, especially the fight scenes between the animals. But who are we to doubt the word of the sponsors?

Here is our reaction to this picture: It would be far more advisable to release it in three or four episodes than as a full-length feature. Although there are some thrilling fights between animals at various times throughout the picture, it would lend itself more readily to box office money if handled as suggested. As an exhibitor myself I would hate to be compelled to run this as the sole feature on any program. It would compel me, regardless of existing policy, to make it the second half of a double bill. And that is what many other exhibitors are going to be faced with. On the other hand, released in three or four episodes, we could build it up strong as the supporting end of a possibly weak feature. Spotting one of the fights in each of the chapters would give each of them the necessary punch.

Jungle and animal pictures always possess a large variety of exploitation and tieup possibilities. This one is no exception. The press book will carry details of some national tieups, too, that may materially assist in the selling of it to the public. Frank Buck, the man who goes into the jungle to "bring 'em back alive," is heard describing the various incidents, but his attempts at humor often fell short.—LEWIS.

Produced by Van Beuren. Distributed by RKO Radio. Suggested by the book "Bring 'Em Back Alive" by Frank Buck and Edward Anthony. Directed by Clyde E. Elliott. Photographed by Carl Berger and Nick Cavaliere. Sound, Paul M. Robillard. Music by Gene Rodemich. Release date, July, 1932. Running time, 70 minutes.

Despite Mr. Lewis' possible misgivings, "Bring 'Em Back Alive" was not in any part pictured in a studio. The animal action scenes were practically all made in a compound adjacent to the city of Singapore, in the Straits Settlements. To the Singapore market the animal trappers of Malaysia bring their wild wares for sale to circus agents and buyers. The scenes staged and recorded in the compound may be accepted as dramatically reasonable reconstructions of what actually happens in the open jungle. The authenticity of the action is beyond question. Mr. Buck's all too unruffled make-up and the artificialities of the radio announcer's words and voice, which purports to be his, represent endeavors at theatricalism which have no bearing on the animal components of the picture, and which constitute its chief claim to attention. The battle of the tiger and the python, which is the high point of the picture, is without a precedent or parallel in wild animal photography. "Bring 'Em Back Alive," in spite of much wordy endeavor, is not a picture of the adventures of the famed Mr. Frank Buck. It is a picture of a lot of quarrelsome beasts, quarreling in the presence of the camera.—THE EDITOR.

Night World

(Universal)

Drama

A comparatively unimportant bit of screen fare which was accompanied by the following marquee copy at the New York Mayfair theatre: "NIGHT HAWKS! GOLD DIGGERS! BROADWAY FROM DUSK TO DAWN! FOLLY DANCES WITH DANGER WHILE TRIGGER FINGERS ITCH! BROADWAY DRAPED IN THE SHIMMERING MYSTERY OF NIGHT!" The picture was far from rating such copy.

The title is fairly good for the box office, but names are lacking to support it properly, unless Lew Ayres, Mae Clark and Boris Karloff are box office names for you. Then again, fancy catchline copy can be worked into your advertising campaign to push that title along still more. But we can hardly recommend the Mayfair marquee phrases for the simple reason that they will give your customers the mistaken notion that they are really going to see a grand picture—which they are not. So stick to the more conventional and less applesauce in your promises about this picture, depending to a great extent on your surrounding program of shorts which should be sufficiently strong to carry off as much attention as the feature.

Audience value is a poor runner-up for the title. The story drags along almost indefinitely and it seemed to this reviewer that no less than three reels had gone by before the story actually got started. This further emphasizes the dire necessity of a good supporting show. The plot is weak and the characters are mostly the same.

Funny things, these pictures. They have many worthwhile slants that might entice a whole community into the theatre to see them, but the advisability of making use of such material when it is obviously misleading is more than questionable. Fooling the public has long since been accepted as rotten judgment.

Not suitable for children or Sunday showings for small towns. Otherwise use discretion in selling this one to your customers.—LEWIS.

Produced and distributed by Universal. Directed by Hobart Henley. Story by P. J. Wolfson and Allen Rivkin. Screen play and dialogue by Richard Schayer. Cameraman, Merritt Gersted. Release date, May 5, 1932. Running time, 58 minutes.

Attorney For The Defense

(Columbia)

Drama

Every member of this competent cast helps to put his head and shoulders above the usual type of courtroom pictures and as a result Columbia brings you one of the season's most entertaining pictures. One thing is certain: it demonstrates what a swell box office draw they can make out of Edmund Lowe by spotting him in these "polished" roles where he can hold his own with any actor on the screen today.

The title is fairly strong b. o., which can be augmented via the names, Edmund Lowe, Constance Cummings and Evelyn Brent; and still further strengthened through the use of ticket-selling copy in your newspaper campaign. Of the latter you will find more than you could possibly make use of during the run of this picture.

Its audience value is what makes it fine screen fare. From the first shot right on down to the "finis" it will prove its worth by reason of the capable direction and outstanding performances of the cast. Perhaps some of the big deluxe first-runs in the key cities will not agree with our enthusiastic report about this attraction, but for most spots there can be little doubt that this is great stuff.

Selling angles are plentiful when you stop to consider the number of slants possible for exploitation and advertising purposes. The district attorney, the electrocution of an innocent man, the trial in which Edmund Lowe defends himself. All these angles lend the selling punch that is so essential in putting over any kind of a picture. Properly advertised with a newspaper campaign composed of smart ads, in which you can make good use of many of the exchange mats broken up to fit your needs, this one ought to be able to build up plenty of box office appeal for the local patrons.

Not particularly suitable for children and in the smaller towns best played away from a Sunday. But we can easily see where a picture like this one will come through with very satisfactory results where an enterprising showman goes to work and sells it right.—Lewis.

Silver Lining

(Patrician Pictures)

Drama

The story of the poor little rich girl, whose money goes to her head, and who, after 30 days in jail, finds herself and a little knowledge of how her poverty-stricken tenement tenants live, is the sum and substance of what there is to work with here. The drama is melodramatic, the performances adequate, but little more.

The title means very little, and rather has reference to the subordinate than the major theme of the story. Previously the film was called "Thirty Days," perhaps a more workable title than the present. There is a certain amount of name value in the cast, but it is not overburdened with it. Maureen O'Sullivan takes the lead, supported by Betty Compson, with a fair performance. John Warburton, hero of the piece, is far too studied in dialogue rendition, too exaggerated in performance to be effectively natural. The rest of the players are comparatively unknown.

The film was seen at an upper Broadway house, as half of a double feature program. Where played, it should be supported by strong and diversified short subjects. If your audience is partial to an old but often proved successful theme, they may well extract an hour of reasonable enjoyment from the film, but it is undoubtedly best suited to the subsequent-run house, where the demand is not too great. Confine playing time to midweek, away from your best nights, and keep it from the youngsters—they will neither enjoy nor appreciate it.—C. S. A.

Night Court

(MGM)

Drama

Here is a picture that might easily be termed "hooey" of the highest order, yet 99 out of every 100 theatres will do a far above average business. The reasons are few and simple. It has a powerful story (even if it is not too well told), a very strong cast and a moral that most towns just love for their entertainment. Coming as it does, right after the many investigations of police courts in the larger cities, the publicity and revelations resulting from these investigations will help it along considerably.

The title certainly should be strong box office meat for most houses, and backed up with such names as Walter Huston, Phillips Holmes, Lewis Stone, Anita Page, Jean Hersholt and Tully Marshall, ought to find the going nice and smooth. If the title and the cast can't accomplish such results then you have some fine selling copy to further enhance its drawing powers.

Audience reaction is OK. It will find welcome attention from all but the big city reviewers, and don't let them bother you. Your particular audience, we predict, will be quite satisfied and will go home ready to tell their friends about it.

The selling highlights should be the crooked magistrate; the frame-up of the wife; putting the young husband on the spot because he threatens the magistrate, and finally the murder of the investigator and the magistrate's alibi which could only be upheld by the young husband. A careful perusal of the campaign book from your nearest exchange will give you the full synopsis of the story as well as many good catch-line phrases to pep up your newspaper advertising. The same is true for the mats which you can make good use of in laying out your ads.

N. G. for kids, but otherwise you can play it anywhere you please. We doubt whether the straight-laced element of anybody's town will take the story seriously enough to register any squawks about a Sunday showing.—Lewis.

The Sign of Four

(Associated Radio Pictures)

Conan Doyle Detective Drama

(Seen in London)

Arthur Wontner, star in this picture, has a screen reputation for Sherlock Holmes characterization, but, although he is still Holmes, he has shown us nothing new in "The Sign of Four." For one thing, he has been "fussed" up by the wig master—his bald top looks moss-covered this time, and the old Sherlock seems to have taken to monkey gland make-up.

The story is not one of the easiest to put on the screen, for Conan Doyle made his famous fictional detective do some of his most remarkable deductional work in this yarn of hidden treasure, and the plotting and counter plotting (to say nothing of an occasional murder), which excites four crook characters, separated after acquiring a knowledge of the treasure, and for the rest of the story, bitter rivals for a closer contact with the "gold and sparklers."

It is all popular stuff, with a desperate wooden-legged ex-convict stalking murderously through the whole story.

The mystery is not too well preserved, and one wonders whether Sherlock Holmes need have troubled to disguise himself so perfectly as an old cabman in order to run his men to earth. But it should give the audience a few sensations. The acting is fairly good, but production is not on a very high plane generally, and was only mildly received at a London trade show.—W. H. M.

Produced by Associated Radio Pictures. Directed by Graham Cutts under production supervision of Rowland V. Lee. Screen play by W. Lipscombe. Running time, 76 minutes.

Man About Town

(Fox)

Drama

What is lacking in entertainment angles is more than made up in the many fine selling slants of this picture, treating of the secret service, diplomatic events in Washington, gambling houses, counterfeiting, murder and what have you? A picture possessing all of these things ought to be a swell audience picture, you may say, but we cannot report that such is the case. Whatever punch it possessed in the script room was lost somewhere between there and the cutting room.

The title is none too good for average selling purposes. To make it mean anything you must support it with the names in the cast which have some b.o. appeal in your community, plus some good, seat-selling copy in your newspaper ads. Of these, fortunately, you have an abundance. Comb through the press book for catchlines, good mat material and all other details about the selling angles.

Audience value is below par because it never manages to maintain a really fast tempo. Starting off well, it begins to slow down before the second reel, then it takes occasional spurts here and there, finally going into a finale fade-out just about the time that the audience would welcome the finish.

Warner Baxter does fine with a weak role. Conway Tearle, as always, is excellent and convincing (why is he not in more pictures?), Karen Morley is beautiful but handicapped like Baxter. Others in the cast are good, but not important for marquee copy.

We feel certain that the showmen who tackle this with the idea that it can bring business above average will come through with just such results. Sell it for all it's worth and give it a strong campaign. The public always has shown a keen liking for anything about Washington, the secret service, etc. Play up those angles which you feel are best liked by your patrons.

Not particularly suited for kids.—Lewis.

Produced and distributed by Fox. Directed by John Francis Dillion. From the novel by Denison Clift. Screen play and dialogue by Leon Gordon. Cameraman, James Wong Howe. Sound, George Leverett. Release date, May 22, 1932. Running time, 76 minutes.

The Man from Hell's Edges

(Sono Art-World Wide)

Western

The exhibitor whose clientele likes Westerns should welcome the opportunity presented in this picture for promising surprises. There are several of them. First is the opening variation for a Western—an escape from a state penitentiary. Next is the holdup of the sheriff and payroll by the fugitive who has been made deputy. And finally comes the revelation that the supposed jailbird is a Secret Service agent trailing the slayers of his father.

Of course your play on the big surprise is to promise it, not divulge it. The field of the Western is not blessed with too many plot turnings that are not evident to the naked eye, and this one will stand up, because it's cleverly disguised until quite close to the denouement.

In the name of the lithe and youthful Bob Steele lies the chief box office value and the exploitation clue. There is flash in the title also; "Hell's Edges" is the convicts' name for the prison, and so the title's strength lies in the words' picturesqueness rather than in any defining of the locale or action.

The rapid shiftings of the plot and resultant action, make for audience value. True, there is a certain monotony in the riding sequences, but this is overshadowed by a series of outstanding moments that carry the interest along. The pursuits seem to suffer a bit from repetition of camera angles, particularly where there are five units of horsemen in pursuit of one another; yet the theme tides the picture over this difficulty. There are pauses in the rough-and-tumble fight of Steele with one of the bandits, yet the Western fan forgets this as he notes the unusual vigor of the blows exchanged.

There should be no limitations as to time of the week or age group. The youngsters should find plenty of action in the picture and we can hear the cheering when Steele goes after the robbers and again when he reveals his identity.—E. A. R.

Der Unsterbliche Lump

The Immortal Vagabond

(Ufa-Leo Brecher)

Drama

A German film, this adapts itself best to those houses which cater to, or can conceivably draw upon, a potential audience with a knowledge of the language, despite the fact that the well told drama involved is readily intelligible to the patron without an understanding of German. The use of superimposed subtitles in English at crucial points in the plot development aids further in that direction.

For those exhibitors who can make use of the foreign production to advantage, then, emphasize the names of Gustav Froelich, one of the most able of the German actors, offering here a fine portrayal; Liane Haid, blondely attractive, also extremely capable. Play upon the title and its implication of an enforced reduction to the vagabond state by a young and promising composer, betrayed by the lack of understanding on the part of the girl's father. The transformation of a man into a tramp should be effectively indicated.

Added to a story, well developed, of ambition and disappointment, ably characterized, there are excellently photographed sequences of the impressive scenery found in the Austrian Tyrol, of the homely people of a small village in the foothills of the Alps. A thematic melody, supposed to be the central movement of the composer's opera, runs through the film, picked up at intervals, well placed, and carried into the concluding sequence to round out the story. Use these factors. Your patrons should be closely held by the story. Offer your German audience a good piece of screen drama in their own language. Suggest to your American audience an example of good foreign production, indicating that they will not be hindered in understanding by a lack of German. It is an adult theme, which could not be appreciated by the juvenile. Play it midweek, as a "different" attraction.—C. S. A.

Produced and distributed by Ufa. Supervised by Joe May. Directed by Gustav Ucicky. Manuscript by Robert Liebmann and Karl Hartl, from the operetta by Felix Doermann and Edmund Eysler. Music by Ralph Benatzky. Photographed by Carl Hoffman. Release date, May 22, 1932. Running time 88 minutes.

Street of Women

(Warner)

Drama

Kay Francis, in a truly metropolitan drama, of society, of unconventional love and the complications of a brother in love with the daughter of the man with whom Miss Francis is carrying on her affair, offers a really capable, intelligent performance.

She is billed top, she belongs there, and her work should not fall below the exploitation promise, in the estimation of the audience. It might be well to take precaution in the handling of the title. There is in it a certain implication to which the straight-laced community in particular may register an objection. As a matter of fact, the title refers merely to the dialogue remark that all large projects, in this case skyscrapers, are the result of feminine inspiration. Exploit the title from that angle, take no chances on the other side. Miss Francis supplies the inspiration in her affair with a married man, but, except in those spots where the frown is heavy upon anything off the beaten track, the unconventionality will cause only sympathy from the audience. For names there are Roland Young, always clever in his dialogue rendition, as the good samaritan. Allan Dinehart, Gloria Stuart, Allan Vincent are comparatively unknown, but give satisfactory performances.

The theme is not particularly new, the basis of the plot is homely, rather down to earth, but the treatment tends rather toward the sophisticated. Indicate clearly to the potential audience the type of story they will see, promise a good performance by Kay Francis, ably supported, and play it to best advantage during the week. There is nothing in the film that can possibly appeal to the youngsters. It is an adult theme fundamentally, with adult treatment entirely.—C. S. A.

Produced and distributed by Warner Brothers. Directed by Archie Mayo. From the novel by Polan Banks. Screen play by Mary McCall, Jr. Adaptation and dialogue by Charles Kenyon. Photographed by Ernest Haller. Art director, Anton Grot. Film editor, Jim Gibbons. Release date, June 4, 1932. Running time, 60 minutes.

SHORTS

The Giddy Age

Fun and Action

Though this Mack Sennett production might have been condensed a bit to advantage by eliminating a few halting spots, the general run of the picture is mirthful action highlighted by Andy Clyde's happy manipulation of the dialogue. Clyde's faculty of making the most of talking sequences is one of the brightest usages of sound in short features. Franklin Pangborn is his lovesick secretary who discovers finally that "my Mabel" is the same girl as the one of the slicker trio played by Dorothy Granger, Albert Conti and Bud Jamison.—Running time, 21½ minutes.

Grandma's Pet

(Universal)

Amusing

The youngsters in particular will enjoy this animated number, dealing as it does with the "Little Red Riding Hood" yarn of the school reader. The elders will appreciate the cleverness of the cartoonist's play on the tale. The fact that it all turns out to a dream of Universal's Oswald—the Rabbit, adds an amusing touch.—Running time, 8 minutes.

Come Back to Erin

(MGM)

Appealing

Able, interesting, photographically excellent are the James A. Fitzpatrick travel shorts, released by MGM. This one measures par or better. The camera roves about the isle, recording the most effective of the scenic beauties. Fitzpatrick intelligently renders the accompanying descriptive dialogue, while a background of several elderly Irish musical numbers enhances the atmospheric effect of the subject. Running time, 9 minutes.

The Promoter

(RKO Pathe)

Funny

Benny Rubin as the wrestling promoter who is tossed into the audience and indulges in similar antics, is laughable in his comic manner, his amusing lines. The audience at the bout tosses cushions into the ring, and the grapplers use them for their greater comfort, which is an example of the type of laugh-provocation employed. Successfully, too, as an audience at a Broadway house indicated.—Running time, 20 minutes.

A Mail Bride

(Vitaphone)

Miss Etting Sings

The comedy is merely a background excuse for the vocal rendition of Ruth Etting, who sings several popular numbers in an effectively modern manner. Her maid reads the matrimonial column, sends a letter, with Miss Etting's picture, and a German appears. He had sent, instead of his comic features, the picture of a handsome, well known German singer. The two arrive at the apartment at the same time, and Miss Etting smoothes the situation, via melody, of course.—Running time, 18 minutes.

The Naggers Go Ritzy

(Vitaphone)

Only Fair

Mr. and Mrs. Jack Norworth, bickering couple of the comedy series, "The Naggers," here attempt new heights, and give a party, in evening dress, with all the fixings. The guests are slowly starving, while the caterer demands $65 before he will serve. The situation is saved when Norworth pleads to his guests for an unknown needy family, and collects plenty. Closing shot has the caterer himself doing his bit for the worthy cause. Not more than fair.—Running time, 10 minutes.

Now's the Time

Fair Comedy

Harry Barris, whose voice and manner of rendering certain of the popular songs of the day seem to be his chief attributes, is provided a comedy story and setting for a few numbers, which are perhaps effective to those who derive any amount of pleasure from his type of vocalization. The comedy concerns a girl for whom Barris falls, her sister, and the latter's husband played by big and big-voiced Edgar Kennedy, who believes Barris is making advances to his wife, and who pursues him with a large shotgun. It goes off at the wrong time, of course.—Running time, 20 minutes.

Murder in the Pullman

(Vitaphone)

Mystery Sketch

Donald Meek plays the amateur criminologist in this number of the series of mystery stories prepared for Vitaphone by S. S. Van Dine, creator of the fictional character, Philo Vance. A woman is murdered in a Pullman compartment, with three men obviously implicated, all very likely guilty. Meek deduces that the least likely of the three is the murderer, he having utilized the trick of ventriloquism to hide his crime. Sustains the interest.—Running time, 20 minutes.

THEATRE RECEIPTS

The total of theatre receipts for the calendar week ended May 28, 1932, reached $2,010,022, a decrease of $175,513 from the total for the previous calendar week, ended May 21, of $2,185,535. The decrease is partly accounted for by the fact that the lower gross was reported from 179 theatres in 30 cities, while the higher included 182 houses in 30 cities. During the more recent seven-day period, no new high individual house records were established, while 15 new low figures were recorded. This compares with one new "high" and 12 new "lows" in the previous week.

'BEER TAX TIEUP WOULD BE INSANE'

—COL. H. A. COLE, TEXAS

COLE PROTESTS WOOD WET PLEA

To the Editor of The Herald:

About a week ago this office received a letter from P. J. Wood of Columbus, Ohio, in which he advocated that every exhibitor wire his Congressman at Washington to vote in favor of the O'Connor-Hull bill to request the sale of 2.75 per cent beer, thus providing for additional revenue. He states that the passage of this bill will make it unnecessary for the Government to tax the exhibitor 10 per cent of his receipts!

Mr. Wood sent this letter out, not on the stationery of the MPTO of Ohio, but on a letterhead of his own; nevertheless it is a well known fact that he is the acting business manager of that organization. The circular was sent to theatre owners, and it is unbelievable that it went out without at least the tacit consent of the Ohio group.

Speaking for the Texas organization, and as a director of the Allied States Association, our national body, I want to go on record as stating that Mr. Wood does not speak for the theatres of the United States, nor can we imagine for an instant that he speaks for many of the exhibitors even in his own group. We all have our personal ideas about the prohibition question, but to tie the motion picture industry in any way into a movement of this kind is absolutely insane.

We are a quasi-public industry, and must in the very nature of our business cater to as close to 100 per cent of our people as possible. Each of us is entitled to vote and to use our influence as he sees fit, but as an institution the theatre business cannot side with either the wet or the dry faction. The surest way to bring about taxation and any other form of adverse legislation is to take a stand of this kind as a body.—H. A. Cole, President A. T. O. of Texas, Dallas, Texas.

HOPES LICHTMAN IDEA WILL SUCCEED

To the Editor of the Herald:

Congratulations, Al Lichtman, and more power to you; and here's hoping the seed you have planted will bear fruit!

At last someone rises to express his thoughts about the nickelodion exhibitors' system and about the exhibitor who unconsciously has grown to be a factor in the amusement world and to actually offer a solution to make the motion picture theatre what it really should be, a merchandising business selling its wares for what they are worth, and place it on the same plane as the grocer, clothier, etc.

Can you imagine a clothier regularly and perpetually featuring every week a suit or suits of clothes at $75 and, a little while later, advertising to the public that it can purchase the very same suit for $25 at another store a few blocks away? But that is just what the motion picture industry has been doing all these years; and I, in my small way, have tried to convince local exchange managers of the advisability of high-caliber pictures such as "Cimarron" never being taken out of the first run class. By this, I don't mean first-run exclusive, but, any house wishing to run the picture may do so only by charging the regular first run price, or say not more than a difference of ten cents.

I can well remember the "Covered Wagon" when it was repeated by subsequent run theatres at the same admission as charged by the first-run house, but even Paramount could not resist the temptation of a few extra dollars and later reissued it and permitted it to be shown at a lower admission.

Just why the motion picture is not deserving of the same place in the amusement world as the legitimate play is beyond me, and I would like someone to give me a reasonable answer. I can name hundreds of legitimate plays that have repeated in the cities, but never at a lesser admission for the return engagement unless it was played by an inferior company.

I want to offer my idea of what would be a legitimate set-up for bringing this business out of its present chaotic condition. If a picture has been classed as a class "A" production, it should never be taken out of this class. If a picture has merits, it will have its return engagements the same as the legitimate play. A class "B" picture should have its own classification, class "C" its own, etc. In my opinion, this will be the solution of the motion picture business' present problem and, incidentally, the saving of the subsequent-run houses which are now facing complete ruin and extermination, for that is exactly what we are facing today.

I want to offer my own predicament. A picture is shown at a first-run theatre for 60c. Forty-five days later the same picture is shown for 35c, fourteen days later for 25c, and then it goes to a local downtown theatre (which was a 50c house a few months ago) at 15c, and still a little later to another former first-run house for 10c. Mind you, neither the story nor the cast has changed, yet the price has. The result is that the 10c house is playing capacity, and the general public has gained contempt for the neighborhood theatre that tries to get more than the lowest admission grind house, and you can't offer them a reasonable answer. But, with the adoption of a policy whereby pictures do not deteriorate in entertaining value with age, the motion picture business will eventually be brought into the class in which it belongs, pulling it out of the hole and mire it has been in, and placing it on the pedestal of art. Like any other commodity, it will be sold to the public for its actual worth, and, incidentally, cure some of the ills that exist today, such as double bills, two-for-ones, and many other racketeering features to which the subsequent run exhibitor has had to resort in order to protect his admission and priority run privilege, and to be able to compete against the lower admission grind house playing the same pictures, sometimes at even lower matinee admission.

Don't for a moment think that I do not realize that it will be a sacrifice on the part of the subsequent run exhibitor, but, in the long run, he will more than profit by such a system, for he will be in a class by himself and will not have any fear of competition in the class of entertainment he is selling.—Ike Geller, Proprietor, Walnut Park Theatre, Portland, Ore.

SEES "A" HOUSES' PROTEST FIRST

To the Editor of The Herald:

The A & B plan can be perpetrated only by a company with a small output of pictures whose revenue is derived almost exclusively from socalled "A" houses.

A company that is unsuccessful selling the smaller theatres and subsequent runs might hope to make up the deficiency from the "A" houses.

In order to profit, however, the company must of necessity create "A" pictures out of some of the "B" pictures, with the result that "A" houses will pay more for inferior product.

If the increased rental is a result of percentage deals, the "A" houses benefit, of course, from the increased gross, but this benefit is only temporary, as the public soon will note this and act accordingly.

It will be interesting for the big majority of exhibitors on the side lines, who for their own protection must remain aloof, to see how the "A" allocations are arrived at; how values are created that do not exist, or, where they do exist in some spots, how other spots accept the appraisal.

With the exception of certain few pictures so outstanding as to have universal appeal, I am afraid there would be so much interchanging of values and allocations as B. O. reports come in from widely different locations that the company would be swamped in the turmoil of their own creation.

"A" houses will be the first to kick over the traces in spite of the advantages they visualize now for themselves.

As applied to competitive situations, the scheme makes the unsuccessful bidder a "B" house, which is undoubtedly expected to accept, gracefully, the B to Z product and bow to the superiority of the competitor.

Subsequent runs will find themselves in the position of having to spend exorbitant sums to advertise first run B to Z pictures to convince the public of their merit as their experience has been that good pictures subsequent run are better than mediocre pictures first run.

For the companies turning out considerable product each season, including short subjects, this plan is not good merchandising as it tends to restrict their market and put their eggs in fewer baskets. Even if the plan is successful for the smaller company with lesser number of pictures the great rank and file of "B" houses need have no fear to eliminate their product entirely from consideration and throw their allegiance to the other distributors with proper merchandising methods, who are and always have been the backbone of their business existence.—J. A. Davis, Colonial Theatre, Southington, Conn.

Neligh, Neb.

DEAR HERALD:

If anyone of you exhibitors failed to read Mr. Lichtman's new plan for the distribution of pictures as set forth in the May 14th issue of the HERALD, you better look it up and read it, for Mr. Lichtman throws down the bars and opens the way for some red hot discussion.

His plan is to classify all pictures into two classes. Class A and class B. He proposes to put class A pictures, which means the cream of the product, into the key city houses at a minimum admission of fifty cents. The class B product, which would be the studios' mill-run, would go into the independent and second-run houses at a lower admission price, and according to his plan the only way the smaller theatres could get the class A pictures would be under contract to play them at a minimum of fifty cents.

At this time when all merchandise has been reduced to practically fifty per cent of former prices, when many of the people who support theatres are out of employment, to place a 50-cent admission price sign in a box office window would be equivalent to hanging out a smallpox sign. On top of this, if the ten per cent admission tax goes through you'd have to advance the price to 55 cents or pay the tax yourselves. How does that sound to you? Mr. Lichtman thinks the public could be educated up to the 50 cent prices, but he forgets that the public got its educational diploma some years ago. The day of the 50 cent admission has long since passed, especially in the eight thousand independent theatres, and to think that it can be forced back is another hallucination that is altogether too prevalent in this business.

If we know anything at all about this business we know what affects the independent exhibitor, and to try to force 50 cent prices on his patrons would mean the death of practically every one of them. In all other lines of merchandising the policy is to obtain all the customers they can. Maybe we don't see this thing right. We have been wrong so many times that perhaps it has become a fixed habit with us, but our eyesight has not yet been so impaired but what we can see through a barbed wire fence without glasses.

Mr. Lichtman contends that distribution costs must be reduced. We agree with him, and the wonder is that someone had not thought of that years ago.

He contends that the classification of pictures under his plan is intended to bring about that result. We doubt that very much.

It won't hurt you boys to think the proposition over, but it won't do you any particular good to simply discuss it with your wife, mother-in-law and Bill Jones. The place to discuss it is through the "Voice Of The Industry" in the HERALD so that the other exhibitors and the whole industry may have your viewpoint. Whether you do this or whether you don't "mox nix oush" (which is the way we spell it) with us, we've told you about it, and that's that.

Notwithstanding our neuritis still "Covers the field like an April Shower," everything is going to come out all right. Amos 'n' Andy have solved the problem of this Depression and we'll soon be out of the mudhole and straddling the rainbow.

In his speech at the Jefferson day dinner love feast, Al Smith agreed with President Hoover on the question of moratoriums, except that Al went Hoover nineteen years better and declared the Government should declare a twenty-year moratorium on all debts owed us by Europe. As soon as we heard that speech we went down to the meat market with their statement and laid it down on the counter and we told Ben Broderson that we had decided to declare a moratorium on his bill for one year. Ben said, "You have, eh? Well I have decided to declare war on dead beats right now!" And he reached for a cleaver.

And then there's another thing. Why is it that the radio companies will permit the broadcasting of the private lives and scandals of the Hollywood folks? We supposed the press did aplenty of that, and yet someone on the program of a prominent cigarette concern seems to take delight in washing the Hollywood linen on every program. It ought to be stopped.

If we were a star and they broadcast our personal life and business we'd smoke a corncob pipe all our life rather than one of their cigarets.

And there is one more matter we don't savvy. And that is, that when the producers get a star worked up to where she has become a universal favorite they replace her with some dollface baby because she photographs well and has a nice form. Suppose they tried to replace Will Rogers, Clark Gable, Wallace Beery, Ralph Bellamy, Chic Sale, Charlie Ruggles, or any other star of equal ability, with some punk whose only recommendation was his nice curly hair and a lispy voice, what would happen? It's ability that counts on the screen as well as in any other line of business.

We have in mind at this time one particular star, and that's Patsy Ruth Miller. Patsy Ruth was one of our screen favorites. Not only that, but we found her to be a universal favorite with fans and exhibitors wherever we have gone, and we've gone quite a considerable distance. There may be some good reason why she is off the screen, but the reason would have to be good to satisfy her following. We are not Patsy Ruth's press agent, she probably doesn't know we are on earth, and if she does, she doesn't know we are out on parole, but our guess is that if some producer would put her back on the screen and give her something worthwhile to do it would not only be beneficial to the company, but it would please a mighty big following.

We expect to start for Illinois, Indiana and Michigan in a few days and we hope the boys over there will remember that we've got neuritis and will not bring up the subject of golf. It would be awfully discouraging to us.

The County Fair

.D.C. (All Talkie: Sound on Film.) Cert. "A." July 18. 5,859 feet.

Exciting race track film, with Hobart Bosworth and Wm. Collier, Jnr. Familiar material cleverly presented with sustained suspense, negro humour, and exceptionally good musical interlude. Excellent racing scenes and stirring gangster stuff, with Ralph Ince. Excellent general booking.

The story of "County Fair" has done duty before, but is presented here with so much ingenious by-play as to create a good substitute for newness. Hobart Bosworth as the Southern Colonel who breeds horses solely for love, and is consequently broke; his daughter, Alice, after whom the dark pet of the stable is named; and Jimmie Dolan, an ex-jockey, are chief protagonists in a story which involves a crooked betting ring, the abducted horse, doping, bribery, and the usual concomitants of a track yarn. At no point does the story break fresh ground, but it is packed in every foot with action, by-play and humour and has many ingenious twists that heighten suspense. This carefully-built excitement is an outstanding feature, and will register effectively with most audiences.

Actual racing scenes are cleverly photographed, and constitute an attraction. Special praise must be given to unusually musical recording of a negro spiritual—one of the best things of its kind yet produced.

Hobart Bosworth is his excellent self, touch of heart trouble and all, and Wm. Collier carries all before him in pleasant style. Supporting cast notably good, including Ralph Ince as dominating gangster. First-rate exciting booking of it class.

"THE COUNTY FAIR"

P.D.C. American. 5,859 Feet. Cert. "A." Release: July 18, 1932.
Director: Louis King. Leading Players: William Collier, Jnr., Marion Shilling.
Recording System: Western Electric, sound on film.

Racing melodrama. Vigorous story of race gang's attempt to prevent "dead cert" from running. Doping, abstraction of horse from guarded stables, and nick-of-time frustration of final crookedness, secure strong suspense values, enhanced by authentic race track settings and atmosphere. Hearty fist-fight and pursuit episodes; refreshing unsentimental romance; amusing negroid comments. Straightforward direction; competent portrayals; good recording. Sure-fire popular hall booking.

If this is an example of the Monogram policy of giving the popular public what it wants, it certainly is a successful one. Almost any reasonably well presented racing melodrama can be certain of raising a responsive flutter in the heart of the average patron; and this is more than reasonably well staged, exploiting as it does all the accepted devices of suspense, frustrations of crookedness, and final triumph with marked success. This film is safe to get the glad hand from popular hall audiences.

The story shows how Jimmie Dolan, waiter at the Agua Caliente racecourse hotel, squabbles with a pretty waitress, Alice Ainsworth, over a tip but becomes her firm friend and protector after seeing the wonder horse (also called Alice) which her father, Colonel Ainsworth is secretly training for the handicap race. A race gang, headed by "Diamond" Barnett, that is heavily backing another horse, gets wind of Alice's marvellous times. After failing to bribe the negro jockey and inadequately doping the horse Diamond has her locked up on the grounds that the impoverished Colonel has been unable to pay a feed bill. Jimmie and Alice, however, stage a quarrel with Diamond's henchmen, rescue the horse from a hole in the back of the stable; and Jimmie despite Diamond's success in capturing the truck on the road to the track, and getting imprisoned himself, manages to get the horse on the track just in time for it to enter and win. The casual shooting of Diamond by a "big shot" gangster in with him on his scheme only needs a happy fade between Jimmie and Alice (the girl, not the horse) to complete the film properly.

The generous action incidentals are well staged; and the final race, with its convincingly tense atmosphere, appears actually to have been taken at the famous Agua Caliente track. William Collier, jnr., and Marion Shilling are refreshingly unsentimental in their attitude to each other; and there is a good supporting cast, of which Hobart Bosworth, as the impoverished but upright old Colonel, and Snowflake, the very negroid stable hand, deserve special mention.

Monogram 70 mins.

DANDY LITTLE RACETRACK MELODRAMA WITH GOOD CAST, ACTION, HUMAN INTEREST AND SUSPENSE.

An unpretentious but all-around satisfactory job, resulting in good entertainment value all the way. Though the basic plot is not particularly new, the adaptors and Director Louis King handled it in such a way that it never lets the interest lag. A gang of racetrack crooks headed by Ralph Ince have framed a certain horse to win. They learn that an unknown filly owned by Hobart Bosworth, a kindly Kentucky colonel who has gone poor in his love for horses, has the best chance of winning. So they go in for strong-arm tactics to keep the prospective winner out of the race. Bosworth's daughter, played by Marion Shilling, is working as a cigarette girl to help her financially busted father, and in the same restaurant is William Collier, Jr., a former jockey now working as a waiter. They supply the neat love interest, with Miss Shilling very winsome, and Collier defeating the crooks.

Director, Louis King; Author, Roy Fitzroy; Adaptor, Harvey Harris Gates; Dialoguer, same; Cameraman, Archie Stout; Recording Engineer, Balsley and Phillips.

"The County Fair"

(Monogram)

Most of the fair scenes are at the start. After a few shots of a tent show and crowds the action begins and it keeps right on to the finish, in a series of swiftly moving sequences that keep the audience on edge.

William Collier, Jr., as an ex-jockey and at present a waiter, falls in love with the cigarette girl at the track restaurant. She is the daughter of an old Kentuckian, somewhat down on his luck, who has developed a four-year-old thoroughbred. Ralph Ince heads a gang of gamblers who try to prevent the horse from entering a race. There are some high class race shots, some good comedy, and plenty of action.

Hobart Bosworth is the Kentuckian and Marion Schilling the girl. Louis King directed.

The BLUEBOOK School

By F. H. RICHARDSON

BLUEBOOK SCHOOL QUESTION NO. 130.—(A) Describe a 4.5-inch diameter meniscus bi-convex condenser lens. (B) Describe a 4.5-inch diameter plano-convex lens. (C) Describe a 6-inch diameter bi-convex lens of 6-inch focal length. (E) Of what is a meniscus bi-convex condenser composed? (F) Why are the convex sides of two plano-convex condensing lenses always placed with their curvex sides next each other?

Answer to Question No. 123

Bluebook School Question No. 123 was: "Presuming your projection lens to have a two-inch free diameter and a 4.5-inch working distance, and that you have a plano-convex condenser with a 4.75-inch free diameter, what must be the distance of the condenser from the aperture in order that the entire light beam may enter the lens? At what point between the light source and the projeciton lens would this entail considerable loss? Assuming or admitting the loss to be considerable at this point, what would be the advantage of getting the light beam all into the projection lens?"

This question certainly proved a poser. Some kicked, saying it must be worded wrongly, but it was not. It was worded with view of obliging those attempting to answer to consider the entire light beam action and figure out for themselves just what was meant, which is pretty evident if the whole matter be really studied. Sorry, men, but out of more than 800 answers I have found only six that could be fairly conceded to be correct in the sense that the men evidently grasped the main idea. There was, even in this half-dozen, some difference in figures (I am unable to understand why, but there was) as to condenser-to-aperture distance, but I made some concession on that point.

Those making the correct answers, in the order of their thorough correctness, were George Thompson, Roy J. Arntson, G. E. Doe, S. Evans and C. Rau, Lester Borst and T. Van Vaulkenburg.

I have, after some consideration, concluded that Brother Thompson has a bit the best of it. He says:

"I think, after examining this whole question, you have deliberately worded it to compel us to work pretty hard in examining the whole beam action. When that is done the thing is quite simple, or so I think. And, Mr. Richardson, I believe that kind of thing adds very much to the value of the school. I can testify that it is a very real school, too. It often makes us dig under the surface of things in order to get an understanding of not only the questions themselves, but of the principles upon which they are based."

May I express thanks to Brother Thompson for that. It is exactly the truth. I not infrequently do so word questions that the whole matter being dealt with must be carefully examined before an intelligent understanding of what the question is based upon can be arrived at. It is my intention to make my "scholars" very real ones. Thompson continues:

"In order to answer this question correctly and precisely, it is necessary to know what dimension of aperture (movietone or silent) is being used. I shall therefore describe the process by means of which a correct answer may be obtained. Secure a sheet of smooth paper not less than 30 inches long, by any convenient width not less than say, eight inches. Pin it on a level table top. Across the length of the paper draw three perfectly straight lines, two of them exactly 4.75 inches apart, with the third exactly central between them. The center line is the optical axis line. The outer lines represent the condenser free diameter.

"Near one end of the paper make two small dots, each exactly one inch from the central line. These represent the projection lens free diamater. Exactly 4.5 inches from them make two other dots, one on either side of the central line, with the central line. These two line dots should be, and apart a distance exactly equal to the distance across from opposite corner to opposite corner of the aperture you are using. I have used the word 'exactly' each time for the reason that much depends upon accuracy. Careless work will result in wrong results.

"Next fix a thumbtack in each of the four dots, and to each of those representing lens diameter, affix a thread. Stretch the thread fixed to the lower tack out past and barely in contact with the upper aperture tack. Make a dot where it crosses the upper condenser diameter line. Do likewise with the upper lens and lower aperture tack, also making a dot where it crosses the lower line. These two line dots should be, and if you have worked accurately, will be exactly the same distance from the aperture dots, and the distance the edges of the front face of the converging lens must be from the aperture of the dimensions you are using in order to enable the projection lens to pick up all the light, will be the distance of line dots from the aperture dots.

"However, I personally would not believe it good practice to use the aperture diagonal. The width of it would, it seems to me be better, but I have answered the question as asked.

"In order to get the entire light beam into the projection lens, would under some conditions set up heavy loss of light by reason of the long focal length condenser it would be necessary to use acting to increase the distance between collector lens and light source. The advantage of getting the light beam all into the lens, even at the expense of certain losses, would be added evenness of screen illumination as compared with the other condition."

I have re-written Brother Thompson's answer and altered its phraseology, but not in any degree its meaning. It is the type of answer that proves conclusively the writer's thorough knowledge of the various things involved in light source to projection lens light beam action.

uses reasoning and intelligent thought in his study.

"As to the quality of light produced by an a. c. arc, my view is that this matter rests entirely in the spectrum characteristics of the arc stream; that it is entirely independent of the crater light quality. Since a. c. reverses its direction many times per second, the arc stream is vigorously excited, and in such a state of agitation that molecules of gas are broken down, thus releasing additional electrons, which add greaty to the penetrating power of the light. Using soft carbons will result in a hotter, more dense gas stream, which has the effect of enhancing the action to ideal proportions."

This is a point never before raised, so far as I know, by any one. I therefore submitted Brother Borst's letter to Dr. R. R. Geib of the National Carbon Company. His comment follows:

"Supplementing my letter pertaining to the question raised by Mr. Borst, I believe the following explanation will clear the matter up to the satisfaction of all concerned:

"The snow white light from National White Flame a. c. projector carbons is due to the use of compounds of the cerium group of rare earths introduced into the cores of the carbons. As explained in the answer to one of your previous questions, the current is carried through the arc stream by ionized carbon vapor volatized from the positive of the d. c. arc, or from both carbons in the a. c. If neutral cored carbons are used, this arc stream is nearly colorless, but when the cerium group of rare earth compounds is used, there are present the gases of these compounds volatized by the very high temperature of the arc, and these heated gases are the sources of luminosity in the arc stream.

"In analyzing Mr. Borst's answer to the question, he is correct in that the quality of the light from an a. c. stream, assuming that he is using National White Flame a. c. carbons, is entirely independent of the crater light quality, but the cause of this is the presence of the rare earth compounds in the arc stream as explained above."

Hollywood Awaits War of Recording Equipment Makers

Hollywood looks for a war of recording equipment manufacturers involving independent production. Major companies are set on long-term contracts with Western Electric (ERPI) or RCA Photophone, with Western Electric having the edge with the majors by a considerable margin.

The heavy increase in independent production has brought about a situation which threatens to disrupt the status quo on recording, as it affects the independent field. Cause of the squalls is said to be due largely to the $500 per reel royalty exacted by Western Electric, a charge to which independents like Monogram, the Goldstone-financed enterprises and others are said to object.

Monogram has been using the recording equipment of Balsley and Phillips, Western Electric licensee.

Photophone has been working closely with Phil Goldstone, one of the leading independent production financiers. It is understood that Mr. Goldstone is becoming increasingly interested in Photophone for productions which he finances. Photophone contracts provide an option of two methods for royalty payments, one a flat $500 per reel, which is used chiefly by majors. The other is the payment of eight per cent of the production cost, which appears to provide the reduction wanted by independents. On a $20,000 negative, for example, this would reduce the royalty to about half the flat fee of $500.

ERPI and Photophone are coming out with an entirely new wrinkle of wide-range recording and reproduction. Photophone appears to be preparing to get this new recording system very definitely into the independent field, particularly through the Goldstone connection.

In addition to Balsley and Phillips, the only Coast rental studios available with Western Electric equipment are Metropolitan and Universal. Photophone has the recently reopened RKO-Pathe studio at Culver City, and it is also available at Tec-Art, and in the Tiffany studios, although at the latter recently some producers were using Western Electric, brought in portably.

At any rate, it looks as though there was to be a mighty scramble in Hollywood.

IT'S UP TO THE MANAGER!

IN every respect, right down to the smallest detail, the ability and personality of the manager is always reflected in the theatre and the way it is being run.

Invariably, if the appearance of the house is sloppy; if the projection is careless or faulty; if the help is indifferent; if the patron gets a mumbled reply to a civil question; if the equipment and furnishings are in bad shape; these things are always a reflection of the man who is running the theatre. And last, but most important, if the business is not what it should be, you can gamble on the answer being the same.

Ask for the manager of a house run like this and you will in all probability find the type of individual who fits the appearance of the house he is running.

But reverse the situation. A well-run house; attentive and courteous help; "the patron is always right"; projection and sound, perfect; equipment in tip-top shape; business—"doing fine." When you meet up with the manager of that kind of house you will find in him a real showman and a gentleman well worth meeting.

But the inside of the theatre is not the only place where the manager and his ability is reflected. Pick up the local newspaper. Look through the theatre ads. You'll get another inside slant on the men who run the local houses. Is the advertising attractive? Eye-arresting? Selling? Productive of box office results? Or is it a messed up affair; thrown together without rhyme or reason; nothing emphasized or featured; no effort made to inject seat-selling copy, and in general a sloppy piece of work?

We consider a theatre's advertising equally as important as the way the theatre itself is being run. In ninety-nine out of every hundred theatres the public's first contact is through the medium of the ads. If they appeal or are magnetic enough to pull him and his family to the box office despite a questionable picture, then the manager has been directly responsible for increasing his business via his advertising.

"What's playing at the Blank Theatre?" A question that is probably asked by some one or other in thousands of homes every evening or over the dinner table. They look through the paper and finding the theatre ads scan them, or shop if you will, for what the local theatres have to offer. Since there are so limited a number of real box office smashes that require little or no help in unusual ads, it is safe to assume that the local manager must sell them on more than just a title or a star.

Which brings us to the very important series on theatre advertising layouts now appearing on the Round Table Club pages.

This series, under the leadership of Ken Long, an ad man of wide experience, points out clearly how any showman can make up attractive and seat-selling ads without the aid of an ad artist by making use of the regulation exchange mats available at a few cents on all pictures.

The second of the series appears in this week's issue and advances another step on the path to better theatre advertising. But next week we are going back to the first rung in the ladder and show you step by step how to make up this type of advertising. Tell it to you so plainly that even your head usher can start to learn how to do clever layout work. And if you have a head usher, doorman or assistant who you believe will some day make a good manager, you should inaugurate an intimate little session with them once a week, using Ken Long's ad series as a basis for your meeting.

Newspaper advertising, especially in the spots outside of large key cities, has to improve a great deal before it is going to mean much at the box office. The public now travels to larger cities and compares the theatrical ads with what they are accustomed to in their home towns. Don't let them get the impression that you are not up to scratch when it comes to making your ads a distinct credit to your theatre.

As the advertising series progresses we hope to take you, step by step, through the various phases of newspaper layouts so that you will be able to make each day's ad different from yesterday's and both eye-arresting and attractive.

Our one hope is that you are not one of those men who think you know it all. Just because no one has ever criticized your ads is no indication that they are doing the job they should be doing. Even good advertising can become monotonous when indulged in too often along the same lines.

Try injecting life into your ads and through those ads into your box office, which, in the last analysis, is the deciding factor in all your endeavors. "CHICK"

DICK KIRSCHBAUM
THANX TO "A MEMBER OF THE CLUB"

We couldn't resist the temptation of reprinting this one of Dick's cartoons. Each new day brings forth further proof that some bosses are heading for the point where they will hire managers like they do housemaids. But cheer up, we think we've found that "corner" where Mr. Prosperity is hiding.

HOLMES RECEIVED A GREAT WRITE-UP WHEN TRANSFERRED

We are forthright removing from our scant stock of brown derbies a spring model for the crown of one Conrad Holmes, erstwhile showman of the great northwest regions and now manager of what has been styled "that gorgeous palace of pictorial pleasure," the RKO-Keith's Theatre, Boston, Mass.

The chief reason for bestowing one of the Club's highest honors on Mr. Holmes is a tear sheet from an evening newspaper of the conservative city in which he now resides, which proclaimed a few weeks ago via seven column streamer head and signed story that he had arrived in town. Under the byline ran an almost full column yarn, with a photo, reporting in full the admirable characteristics of our distinguished member. It further noted his observations on the trend of showbusiness and in indented bold face type touched quite freely upon the entertaining qualities of a number of forthcoming attractions. By way of introducing this showman to a new community his past experiences were also dwelt upon.

Did Conrad Holmes sell that reporter something worthwhile when he called around to gather a bit of news? We'll say he did, and how! It was a corking yarn that stole the amusement page—and in the city of Boston, at that! It's a long jump from Oregon to Cape Cod but a showman's a showman wherever he may be. By this time Holmes has had a chance to find his way around town, so we'll be looking for further news concerning Keith's.

M. COWAN DISPLAYED GOOD SALESMANSHIP ON MERCHANT TIE-UP

Good salesmanship often has to be used these days when it comes to promoting giveaways which will attract the proper amount of attention from patrons and we note that a slighly different method of approach was used by M. E. Cowan, manager of the Piqua Theatre, Piqua, Ohio, when augmenting his recent campaign for Jubilee Month.

He contacted a number of his merchant acquaintances and sold them on the idea of diverting a portion of the monthly advertising into a channel entirely different than he had been in the habit of using; namely, trying his (Cowan's) style for a month. This, he explained, would be in the form of some worthwhile gift and one which would impress patrons of both store and theatre. A card was given out at the box office, in the usual give-away fashion, which, in addition to listing the gifts, carried space for purchaser's name and address. These were later deposited at the merchant's store. Cowan also gave the merchants a month's privilege of trailer advertising.

Gifts including a $150 electric refrigerator, a $100 bedroom suite, a $50 clock and a complete outfit for a man, were among the articles donated by the merchants. The newspapers also came through with a number of good write-ups. All in all, it appears that Cowan put over a neat deal and he is to be congratulated for his sales ability. From what we hear, the merchants were well satisfied with the advertising they received and will, in all probability, be in a more receptive mood next time.

FRED REETH ISSUED LIVELY THROW-AWAY FOR CURRENT PICTURE

For a little gag on "Man Wanted," Fred Reeth, manager of Warner's Sheyboygan Theatre, issued a small herald headed with title words. Following copy read: "We Want 1,000 men to bring their sweethearts or girl friends to see Kay Francis in her first starring role for Warner Bros. It will give you a very happy evening of relaxation. It's spicy, snappy and just a little bit risque, packed with plenty of real, hearty laughs, and will make you forget your troubles. This is not recommended for innocent young girls." Title words again followed, along with playdates and name of theatre.

NEW MEMBER ROBERT CHAMBERS IS DOING ART WORK FOR BAIR

Though only seventeen years of age Robert Chambers, one of our new members, is turning out art work for R. R. Bair's five theatres in Indianapolis.

With limited newspaper space Chambers ably demonstrates what can be done with a two-column, 2½-inch ad in the matter of placing attractions of all five houses in front of readers' eyes. A sample of his work will appear elsewhere in this department.

Robert Chambers

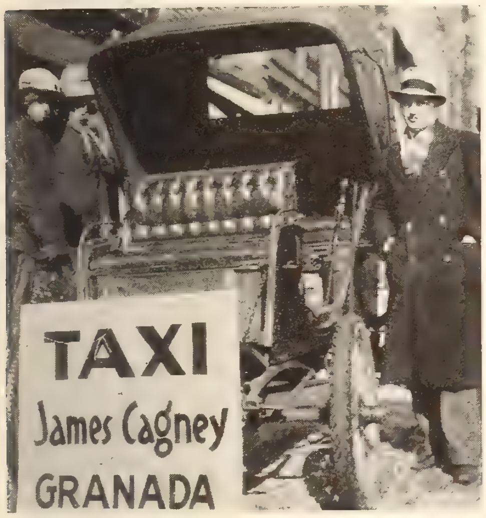
His poster work, reproduced in a number of snapshots, also shows that he has studiously applied himself to that end of the business and we'd be only too glad to show some of them here if the snaps were sharper as to detail. However, he promises to shoot along some larger and clearer photographs in the future.

In addition to working for Mr. Bair, Chambers is attending Butler University, which is enough to keep any young fellow out of mischief. We will look forward with interest to receipt of further examples of his work.

PRYTZ DISCOVERED ANTIQUE MOTOR CAR TO USE AS A BALLY

Since his opposition had used the leading taxi concern in the city to exploit "Taxi," Roy Prytz, manager of the Granada Theatre, Duluth, Minn., decided to dig up something different, and he did, according to the vehicle illustrated herewith.

It was one of those antiquated autos made about thirty years ago and was used during shopping hours to obtain maximum publicity. The owner, the only man in the world who could drive the old car, was instructed to have break-downs at the best corners, and this was not at all a hard matter to bring about. Two "jaspers" were unearthed and dressed appropriately for the ride around town. The odd looking car had never been seen in the city and it attracted wide attention.



Prytz did nice business on "Taxi" and thinks that Mrs. Cagney's little boy James is a good draw. Oh yes, he also put over a number of corking window displays on "Delicious," tying in with six "loop" bakeries and the delicious pastries for sale. Okay, Roy, and continue the good work. We hope Spring has reached Duluth by this time and that you'll let us know what is going on at the Granada.

CREDIT DANNENBERG WITH PROMOTION OF AN EFFECTIVE CO-OP.

A neat cooperative ad was recently promoted by Sid Dannenberg, director of advertising and publicity for Warner Theatres in Cleveland territory, and when we state "promoted," we mean 100 per cent free.

He tied up with an Ohio dairy company for insertion of a newspaper ad 4 columns wide by twelve and one-half inches deep, headline reading, "The Crowd Roars for James Cagney at the Lake—and here's another Crowd Roaring for Ohio Farmers Milk." Cagney's photo and a flock of yowling babies furnished the display punch. In exchange for the ad Dannenberg let the dairy outfit place a series of 12 photographs in the lobby, showing production and distribution methods. A company employee explained the highlights. There was also a giveaway for a week's milk supply.

A nice little piece of work to be chalked up to the credit of Dannenberg and his Cleveland crew and it appears to be a gag which can easily be adapted to other films.

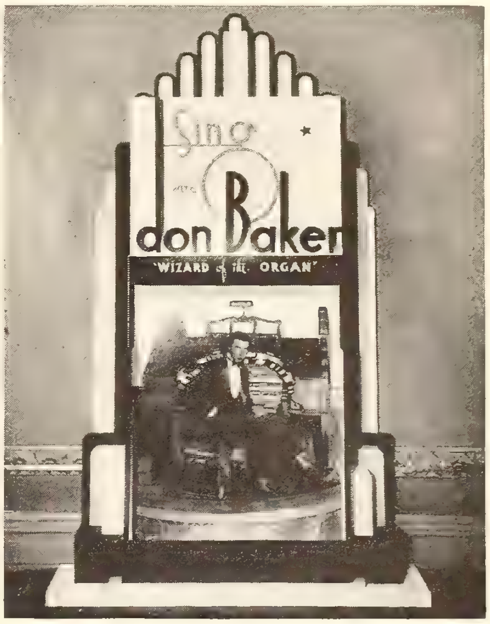
COPPOCK CALLS OUR ATTENTION TO WORK DONE BY H. NELSON

House personalities as well as other features of institutional selling should receive careful consideration, believes E. S. C. Coppock, manager of the Paramount Theatre, Stapleton, S. I., N. Y., and calls attention to a plug for the house organist recently made by Harold Nelson, late of Denver show circles and now staff artist for Coppock's well known theatre.

As you will note in the accompanying photograph the entire display is solidly constructed along modernistic lines and done in simple color combination of white, green and black with large cutout letters of wood. The lower part of the display is a cutout photographic enlargement of the organist at the console. Recessed in the extreme bottom are tubular lights casting an upward glow with the effect of footlights. Directly under the large, wooden cutout letters spelling Baker's name is another trough covered with opalescent glass and containing tubular lamps.



Those familiar with display art will at once be impressed with the simplicity of the entire layout and, we believe, give a hand to Nelson for his work. Organists, musical directors, M. C.'s and others represent a sizeable chunk of the payroll of any theatre and are sometimes neglected in seeking immediate results wanted from some particular picture. We believe with Coppock that other house features and personalities should receive their proportionate share of attention, particularly in the neighborhood house. After all, it really amounts to the popular notion of selling a complete program, a move being followed by many managers these bargain-hunting days.

Adding Fuel to Flame

On top of all the trouble the Strand and two other Publix theatres in Plainfield, N. J., have had with local authorities on the subject of Sunday movies for the past three months, two young thugs walked into Russell Terhune's office at the Strand and relieved him of $1,900 which he was about to take to the bank. Trussed up with cord and gags, Russ finally worked himself loose and notified the police.

Keeping Up With The Times!

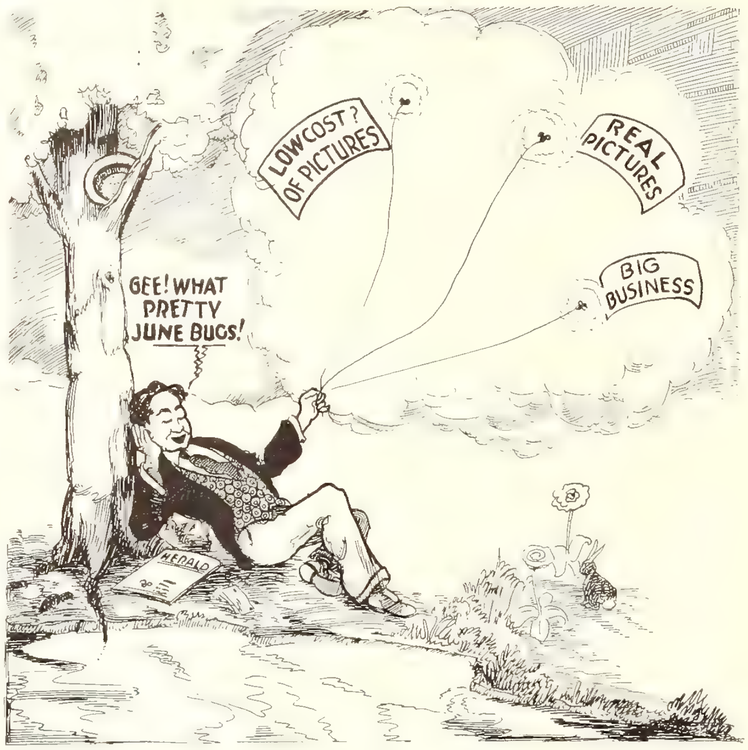
By GUY JONES



Jones has certainly developed into an optimist all right. Here he pictures a manager on a vacation(?) doing some well-earned day-dreaming. However, we'll let him dream merrily on and perhaps another June bug labeled "Happy Days" will come his way.

MORRISON PROMOTED NUMBER OF COSTLESS EXPLOITATION GAGS

A number of effective tie-ups were recently made by M. F. Morrison, manager of the Rialto Theatre, Brockton, Mass., among which were newspaper deals, a radio stunt, and two extensive direct by mail advertising drives.

His classified ad tie-up with the newspaper nets him 63 inches of free space each week; in other words, just twelve times as many inches as paid for. In return he runs a type trailer on the gag and issues guest tickets to the winners. A boxed-off portion of the classified page carries theatre copy and a number of questions for readers to answer, such as "Who Repairs Typewriters? Who Offers a 3-piece Set of Curly Maple for $49," etc. Names of winners for the preceding week are also published. Much favorable comment and excellent results have been obtained from this stunt.

He recently effected a tie-up with a local radio station whereby a 200 word announcement on shows is received every Saturday morning at 10.30. Talent used on this program is all local and it has become a most popular number in Brockton and surrounding communities. All the theatre gives in return is the runing of a one-frame type trailer for announcement of the "Rialto Theatre's Local Merchant Hour," giving name of station and time of broadcast.

To boost Monday night trade he arranged with the Kay Jewelry Company for gratis mailing and printing of 10,000 regulation post cards and circular letters to patrons in and around the city, announcing that the Rialto Theatre would extend the courtesy of allowing a 35c orchestra seat for 20c, good only on Monday nights. Another deal with the same company consisted of mailing out 10,000 post cards to customers, with copy on back stating that presentation of the card at the store would entitle bearer to two 25c tickets at the rate of 20c each. The theatre left 25c tickets at the store and the store sells them, rebating the theatre the difference. The card also stated that the holder of the card could obtain a 35c seat if attending the theatre between the hours of 6.00 and 7.30 P. M. It was further stipulated that the cards would not be good after 7.30 P. M.

CHAMPION "MUTT" OF CALGARY DETERMINED BY MANAGER P. EGAN

The question of who owned the champion "mutt" in Calgary, Canada, was decided not long ago by Pete Egan, well known showman and Round Tabler of that city and manager of the Palace and Grand Theatres.

He proved to the satisfaction of all that Rover, a cross between an Airedale and a Setter, was the best out of 200 nondescript hounds which were proudly displayed by their young owners at the Hudson Bay Company, largest department store in western Canada. Rover's owner received an award of $5 and Rover a bag of weiners. Second, third and five consolation awards were also made. Through the courtesy of the Palace Theatre, parents of the boy who received first honors were given a month's pass, and a pass each to owners of 50 selected "mutts." All the youngsters paraded to the theatre, thousands watching the spectacle.

We're glad to know that Pete Egan has settled the mutt championship of Calgary for the time being and it may be that other Round Tablers will take a tip from Pete and get this matter straightened out in their towns. We will await further information on this moot subject.

PHELAN HAS A GOOD TIE-UP WITH PAPER PRINTED BY SCHOOL

Just to let you know that Tommy Phelan is still on the job of planting publicity for his shows at the Paramount Theatre, Long Branch, N. J., in as many mediums possible, we must record that a local high school newspaper regularly carries a column headed "Talkie Tips," in which is related the latest film gossip of the town.

No matter who writes the stuff, Tommy or some student (we guess it's no less than Tommy himself), it's done in a style that's a long way from the usual reader material; in fact, it closely follows the style of the paper and is therefore read with interest. Current and coming attractions are entertainingly discussed. In return for this effective column the theatre dishes out a handful of guest tickets to students in various departments.

J. STODEL RIGGED NOVEL ADVERTISING SIGN ON SAIL BOAT

Managers in seagoing towns may be interested in a stunt pulled by Jack H. Stodel, branch manager of African Consolidated Theatres, Ltd., Cape Town, Africa.

When playing a recent feature he engaged a power boat, rigged with a mast and dressed with numerous pennants, to run along the coast for eight or ten miles. In place of a sail banner netting displayed the title of picture and name of theatre. The boat plyed its course along the residential areas.

Many little gags used here in the States are popular down Stodel's way, such as distribution of peanuts in small bags when playing "Cracked Nuts," and small packages of chewing gum on another picture. The only suggestion we could make to Jack is that he tie-up some local merchant for an ad to take care of cost of bags, etc.

Horoscope cards were also used to excellent advantage on "The Lottery Bride," which covered all months of the year. One side carried theatre and picture ad and the other the horoscope. This gag generally gets attention since people never seem to tire of fortune telling, etc.

CLERGY RESPONDED TO WORK'S LETTER ON ARLISS PICTURE

A special list of all members of the Ministerial Association of San Diego, Calif., was used as a special invitation mailing list by James R. Work, manager of the Mission Theatre in that city, as an exploitation medium for "Man Who Played God." Work states that he received effective response from the stunt, several of the clergy praising the picture from the pulpit and others writing congratulatory letters.

SUMMER STYLE SHOW!

This is the time of the year when your local merchants ought to be quick to grasp at a chance to stage a Summer Style Show in which the bathing suit and beach angles are played up big.

Some managers, with the proper facilities, prefer to stage these style shows on their promenade or mezzanine floors, but of course the best bet will be the regulation stage showing of such styles.

Merchants can be solicited to furnish not only the bathing attire and other summer clothes, but also the girls to model them. In conjunction with this latter point it may be worth while to run a popularity contest for the most popular or most beautiful model in the show.

Make the staging of your Summer or Bathing Suit Style Show a gala event by tying in as many merchants as you possibly can and getting the newspaper to line up behind you a hundred per cent. Even cold drinks can be promoted as part of your local tie-ups.

Get busy. There is absolutely no need to lay back and cry about poor business. A thousand and one angles are ever-ready to help you bolster up your business and stimulate the communities' interest in your theatre. To lay back now may mean curtains for you or your house this summer.

McCUAN ON THE JOB AT MOUNTAIN GROVE WITH MANY STUNTS

L. C. McCuan, of the Cameo Theatre, Mountain Grove, Mo., tells us there's nothing much doing out his way in the show business, but a variety of data at hand is plenty of evidence that the redoubtable Mack is still socking them right and left in the same old way.

Let's start off with a gag that he is successfully using to boost sickly Saturday matinee trade; and let's suppose that the reader is situated in the same sort of town as Mack—a place with a substantial downtown business section and a number of suburban or neighboring shopping districts. This is a gag only for the suburban stores and about 30 or so of these are lined up and assessed a dollar per week, reeciving in return a number of complimentary tickets to pass out as an incentive for trade. Thus, you will at once see that the theatre is assured of a $30 return from the neighborhoods, with nothing to stop the regular downtown trade from also buying tickets. The stunt is going over with a bang and new customers are being made each week.

We've told you about McCuan's monthly calendar before, but will again remind those who are looking for something to use as an advertising medium in rural communities that he considers this calendar one of the most effective gags in use. It's costless, on account of four ads across bottom of card, and simply gotten up. The top line reads, "Sun-Mon-Tues-Wed-Thur-Fri-Sat." Since never more than two days are given over to showing of a picture no more than two dates appear under the heads. The numerals are printed in red, which stand out in contrast to catchlines and other copy pertaining to pictures. The calendars are distributed in every hotel within a radius of 40 miles, all being glad to hang them up in rooms, restaurants, etc.

Other evidence attesting to McCuan's activities includes a weekly program herald, on which is stated that a free ticket will be given each child who brings in ten of the heralds any week; another herald labeled "Money Slanguage," which listed equivalent terms of 25c in various foreign language and ended up with, "in other words, two bits or a quarter in good old U. S. A. lingo will admit you to," etc.; a throwaway flanked top and bottom with small ads, leaving space in center for a letter that had to be turned around to be read and which started off: "Forget that this is an ad. Consider it a personal message. . . ."; a plug for "Sooky," by which a herald blank with exception of appropriate copy at head was used to get the "first 25 boys or girls to obtain 50 signatures of local residents; a leap year gag of a card printed in duplicate, one for boys and one for girls which, when mated and brought to theatre, would entitle holders to one free ticket, and the use of reproduced photos of stars to plug certain pictures."

All of which, we believe, will point out that Round Tabler McCuan has been using head and legs in efforts to bring trade to his theatre. Speaking of the so-called depression Mack states, "there's no depression when we get a good picture," and it seems that we've heard those same words from many points of the compass. Okay, Mack, and let the boys hear from Mountain Grove again.

Just because you've missed Harold Kopplin's contributions in this department for the past several weeks doesn't mean that he has taken the count or retired from showbusiness. Far from that! He and his associates have just been busy rounding up the spare shekels in Miami, Fla., for the Capitol Theatre. Above is a different kind of herald, or whatever you want to call it, that he recently issued. Copy is snappy, don't you think? And the illustrations of the kind that will attract attention.

"THE BEST PICTURE IN TEN YEARS"

Convinced that the picture would make good, it was shown simultaneously at both theatres in Allentown and at Bethlehem, the latter city only a matter of six miles away from the former. For five days prior to opening a sound truck split time between the two cities, and some very effective newspaper advertising was carried out in both towns. One of the ads is shown in the accompanying illustration. In Bethlehem the picture was tied up with the North Side Merchants' "Spring Window Shopping Night"; and the largest and only department store in town used live models in windows, making announcements through the apparatus on the sound wagon. Records were played in between and theatre announcements on "Shanghai Express" were also gotten over to several thousand people.

One of the finest examples of what can be accomplished through securing the good graces of a newspaper and its editor is shown in a marked portion of a tear sheet we have before us. It is the editorial page of a conservative paper and one of the subjects was headed, "People Recognize and Patronize Good Pictures." It dealt with the important role good pictures could play in the matter of stimulating business generally, deplored the fact that too many poor ones had been turned out in recent months and then extolled the qualities of "Shanghai Express," backing up the theatre's decision that it was big enough to play in two local houses at one time.

That editorial was brought about by Gammet's foresight getting an invitation to the editor to see the picture and then tactfully selling him the idea of writing something about it while he was still "warm." The editor cannot be classed as a movie enthusiast in any sense of the word, but he did recognize good entertainment and tied-up with comment that had reached him in the past.

It seems to us that the value of such an editorial cannot be measured in dollars and cents, when taking into consideration the calibre of the paper that ran it. That brings to mind the suggestion that this same idea might be used by other members. In other words, when you have something real outstanding to offer, go to your editor and get him to see the show with you. Maybe he'll react the same as Gammet's did. At any rate, it's worth a chance. For it's just as Gammet states, "Good pictures can be sold, depression or no depression, Lent or no Lent."

We're glad to hear that our old friend Frank Mickley is in business at the Park in Allentown and hope you'll pass along best regards when you next see him. Also, that Paul Alexander is still on the job at the Strand, and that D. E. Knorr is holding forth at the Embassy. Tell them we'd like to know what they're doing these days for showbusiness.

IMPROVE YOUR ADVERTISING!

Are you thoroughly familiar with your local newspaper's equipment for the making up of advertisements? Do you know the type styles and sizes, rules and borders it has in stock? Most newspapers, upon request, will issue a "type book" showing their full assortment of type styles and sizes, rules and borders. This should be studied carefully, because with this information the ad-writer, when giving specific directions on his layout, will know it is possible for them to be carried out.

A distinct picture of the ad in the rough is essential. Display lines should be carefully lettered. If it is difficult to letter approximately like the type called for, at least make it heavy or light and see that it occupies about the same space as the specified type. Illustration should be cut and pasted in the position desired. (Never cut the mat itself!) This, plus type markings in the margin gives a very clear picture to the compositor of the desired layout. Remember, a neat appearing layout has a direct bearing on the neatness of the finished advertisement.

With few exceptions, play dates, admission prices, starting hours, theatre address and theatre slogan should be in the proximity of the theatre name. It is a good plan, even though playing "program pictures," to mention admission prices and starting hours at least once a week.

On the opposite page are a few layouts on "Letty Lynton" and "Sinners in the Sun." Illustration "A" is a two column by seven inch display on "Letty Lynton." Mat No. 537-K is used. Illustration "B", a two column by five inch ad using mat No. 537-A6. Illustration "C" is a one column by four and one-half inches, using mat No. 537-A12.

Illustration "D" is a one column by five inches on "Sinners in the Sun" using mat No. 1-AY. Illustration "E", a two column by six and the half inch ad using mats Nos. 2-AX and 1-M. Illustration "FW" is a two column by fibe inches. Mats Nos. 2-ASX and 2.AS are used. Copy for all ads is suggested from the press sheet.

HOMETOWNERS STUCK TO GUS BERKHOLTZ; OPPOSITION OUSTED

A letter from August C. Berkholtz, proprietor and general manager of the Mermac Theatre, West Bend, Wis., informs us that he has taken over the West Bend Theatre, a new house leased some time ago to Community Theatres, Inc., of Lake Geneva.

The deal interests us for reason that after trying for over two years to grab trade from the Mermac the West End management was forced to take a licking, all because the hometowners gave Berkholtz the bulk of their support, and despite the fact that many innovations were tried out by the opposition as a means to lure customers away.

There's a sort of a moral to the above, to our way of thinking, for sure as you're alive Berkholtz must have been in the habit of giving his patrons a square deal or they'd never have stuck to him. Anyway, as you will note by the accompanying photo, he has a fine, modern house on his hands and at terms which are undoubtedly satisfactory. Incidentally, the Mermac will hereafter be operated only one day each week.

We'd like to know this showman's recipe for holding trade in face of strong opposition and hope he'll take enough time off one of these days in the near future and tell us all about it.

SELL THAT "COOL" IDEA!

It becomes increasingly important that every slant be utilized to get across that "Cool" angle in connection with your theatre. In addition to plugging it via your newspaper ads, you ought to decorate your marquee and front, frames and displays to convey the same thought.

Serving cool drinks in the lobby or mezzanine, either by local tie-up, or even if you must purchase it wholesale, may prove highly beneficial to the box office.

The entire inside lobby ought to be dressed in fresh greens and plenty of cool-green lights. Some showmen in the past have concealed several fans behind some palms and green and also placed several large cakes of ice there, too. The breeze coming from such a spot gives a most cooling and refreshing feeling to all those passing.

Inside the house you should eliminate all red or warm colors and substitute greens, blues, etc., so as to lend the proper atmosphere to a house that is advertised as cool and comfortable.

WE OFTEN WONDER

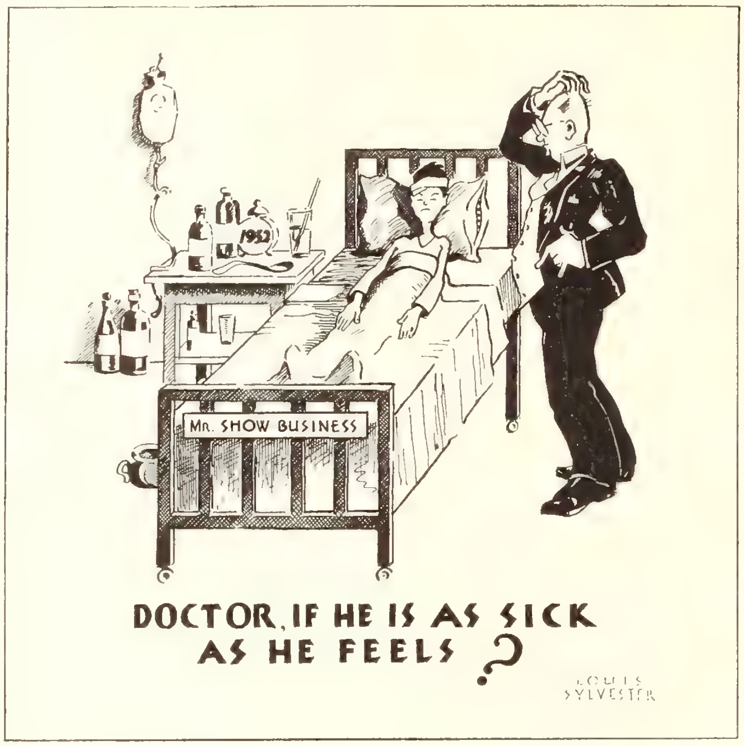
By
LOUIS SYLVESTER



There is some real truth in this cartoon from Lou Sylvester. If business in YOUR house has been ailing maybe it's not near as bad as you think and can be cured by some hard work and effort. Try a good tonic instead of the "depression blues."

RE VOLT HELD SHOW DESPITE DAMAGE TO PROJECTION BOOTH

The trials and tribulations of a theatre manager seem never to cease, as in the case of J. J. Re Volt, general manager of the Alcazar Theatre, Dothan, Ala.

Just one week prior to playing "Shanghai Express" vandals broke into his house and damaged the sound projection equipment to the extent of $2,000. Machines were dismantled and valuable parts stolen.

Undismayed, Re Volt wired for new equipment and got busy on his picture. He arranged for a Big Midnight Preview on a Saturday night, as the show was to run through the following Wednesday. He also secured a toy electric train, all complete with track, etc., and built an animated display. Pictures of stars were glued on each coach and a little set was made to resemble Chinatown. At night in the lobby, where he installed the display, red and green train lights further added to its effectiveness. A head of Dietrich was placed at one end, with red, yellow and blue streamers running from head to window facing the street.

The act of the vandals had been widely publicized in the local paper and the whole town had its eyes on the theatre. With that in mind Re Volt bannered up the entire front and secured about three dozen danger light signals (fuses) from the railroad company. On the night of the preview all other lights were doused and fuses lit. He also arranged for a young fellow to drive his coupe around town with danger signals mounted on the running board of car.

As an added attraction Re Volt tied-up with some local talent and put on a Radio Broadcasting Show, directed from his office. A "mike" was necessarily run through the loud speaker. While Re Volt did the announcing his picture, on special slide with photo in center of a "mike," appeared on the screen. Many favorable comments were received on this stunt and it is now being used as a regular feature at Saturday night previews.

The above is the first news we've had from Dothan for some time and it's gratifying to learn that Re Volt is getting along so famously, despite the unpleasant and costly experience with the vandals who wrecked his machines. We will hope that they will be tracked down and the cause of their action sifted to the bottom, so a thing of that kind will not happen again. We have a snapshot of J. J. himself, standing in front of his house, but will have to wait for a better one before showing his fellow showmen what he looks like.

A NEW SOURCE OF ADDED REVENUE

We can see no reason why theatres should not buy or rent games for use in the lobby, rest rooms or lounges. There are many different varieties of such games and are for a nickel play. The houses already using this idea have discovered in it a new source of revenue that is helping them over the present rough spots.

One manager from out of town, in discussing the matter with us, said that three of these games were netting him over fifty dollars a month. He considered it that much less rent to be paid to the landlord.

Any revenue derived from sources not considered detrimental to the theatre, or contrary to the law, can certainly be looked upon with favor, especially if a house like the New York Paramount finds it profitable.

KRIM CHALLENGED PUBLIC ON MERIT OF ARLISS PICTURE

Sol Krim, manager of the Macomb Theatre, Mount Clemens, Mich., literally "shot the works" when he advertised "Man Who Played God."

Take a look at the accompanying ad and see if you don't get the same idea. Lest you cannot read copy, let us repeat that he "challenged" members of every fraternal order, church, school and other organizations in town to deny the inspirational qualities of the picture. He even told the public that it would be doing an "injustice to itself if it refrained" from witnessing the film.

If Sol carried his point all bridge parties and other social activities were canceled the week the Arliss picture hit town, for so he advised in another newspaper ad. The importance of bringing a picture of this calibre to town was also stressed in the ad and the public was urged to make the engagement a profitable one, the implication being that if it wasn't supported there wouldn't be any more of its kind.

Well, the upshot of the whole thing was that praise from ministers who saw the preview made a front page story in the local paper, three of them endorsing the film as one of "great quality and value." They even went out of their way to urge people to attend the showing. Scout executives and other influential citizens were also included as guests and they also did their share to boost receipts.

Results in the above case uphold the theory that when a really strong picture comes along it rates the running of a forcible ad, if local conditions fit the move. Certainly Sol Krim told 'em something.

FOURTH-OF-JULY!

If there will be any local celebration of this important holiday you should be prepared to get some movie shot of the crowds and the more important participants. These shots should be advertised for an early showing at your theatre through boys with banners or passing out circulars.

It is not entirely essential that you engage a professional cameraman for this sort of work. Several reputable agencies rent 35 mm. Bell & Howell cameras which can be simply operated by yourself. When held fairly steady they produce good pictures.

On the question of Fourth-of-July angles, do not overlook the importance of booking in some appropriate subjects as well as patriotic trailers to emphasize the day.

LOUIS ORLOVE STILL BUILDING GOOD WILL AT MILWAUKEE HOUSE

Reporting on the interesting activities of Louis Orlove, popular manager of the Uptown Theatre, Milwaukee, as usual finds that showman up to his neck in various promotional stunts, among which is another one of his ideas aimed to educate the younger element and, incidentally, build further good will for the theatre.

This latest gag of Louis' is a Bird House Building contest and it's being sponsoed by every well known organization in town, including the Milwaukee County Park Board. At this writing he has arranged everything except the promotion of 1,000 pieces of lumber for building the houses, which will be a cinch for Louis, or for that matter, for a great many other Round Tablers who may adopt the idea. Orlove has tied up with a well known member of the of the Wisconsin Conservation Commission, Lawrence A. Hautz, who has prepared a booklet which contains simple plans for construction of model bird houses. We would suggest that interested Round Tablers get in touch with either one of these men regarding the booklets. It's a gag which will intrigue the youngsters and appeal to influential citizens.

We also note that Orlove made a pleasing gesture to many Jewish patrons of his theatre in advance of the Passover season. He sent out a letter advising them that he had secured some special offerings, including "The Kibbitzer" and Cantor Joseph Rosenblatt in "Omar Rabbi Eliyozar," for their delectation. The letter was written in friendly style and two guest tickets were enclosed for the Pre-Passover Program.

We're sure that all our members will be interested in both of Orlove's stunts. The bird house gag is self-explanatory. Too late for Passover now, of course, but file it away for next year. Unless we're very much mistaken, those patrons appreciate the fact that you have kept their interests in mind.

FRED JOHNSON PUT OVER BIG BENEFIT FOR SICK CHILDREN

News from Oil City, Pa., where Fred Johnson skippers the Latonia Theatre, has been a bit scarce for the past several weeks but we're now privileged to report that this well known Round Tabler is still holding his own.

Fred always did manage to extract his share of free space from his newspaper friends and we note that a tie-up with the Oil City Federation of Women's Clubs for a milk fund for undernourished children netted him a whale of a lot of yarns, both editorial and news. A local bus service was tied-in for transportation of the kiddies and brought the various delegations from all sections of the city. Sale of 2,000 tickets was the goal for the occasion and late returns indicate that expectations were realized. The tie-up was arranged on a percentage basis. "Disraeli" was the film chosen.

Johnson is a great believer in the value of institutional work and the above is just one of the many activities he has engaged in along this line. Milk funds shows always come in for a full share of publicity from many sources and there can be no doubt that Fred fared well in that respect. We are mighty glad to hear from him again and by this time he ought to have some other idea to shoot along.

DISPLAY ART FOR THE THEATRE!

Here we are with the second group of Jack Greiner's art work as turned out for the Warner Theatres in Atlantic City with the aid of Walter Boyd, manager of the Warner Theatre in that city.

Each of these units was created for the purpose of dressing some part of the inner lobby where every patron had to pass when entering the theatre. By using clever lighting effects the displays were considerably enhanced and as a result they attracted no end of attention from everyone, including passers-by on the boardwalk outside whose attention was attracted to the display on the inside.

In addition to these regular weekly displays on coming attractions Greiner also works out something novel on seasonal occasions. These will likewise be published well in advance of the occasion so that others may take advantage of the timeliness of the suggestions.

On outdoor displays this versatile artist has proven himself quite as capable as the ones illustrated here. In the near future we will show another group composed of all outdoor displays as used in Atlantic City. We feel certain that every one of Jack's seat-selling displays will find an eager audience of other theatre artists, all anxious to improve their own work through seeing what the other men are doing.

While this week's selections are a slight deviation from straight poster work we felt that they were closely enough related to warrant including this type of work along with the regular posters. The publication of these others, however, will be resumed next week as promised once before. In the meantime, you poster artists, if you have turned out some nice looking displays please include photos of them with your next contribution to the Poster Art Series.

SUMMER AND THE KIDDIES!

Booking your pictures three to six weeks in advance prompts us to caution you that with the closing of the schools your local children become good box office prospects for practically every afternoon of the week.

Your bookings must therefore be watched with this thought in mind. Augment your programs so as to inject some youngster appeal and remember there are many worth-while tie-ups available which will bring the kiddies flocking to your house on specified days.

Ice cream give-away bags are always timely during the summer months and even help pull many adult admissions into the house. By all means include them in the free ice-cream stunts. Don't forget that they pay a much larger admission than the kids.

Incidentally, if your town has a good local playground it would be far more advisable to arrange to take shots of the kids at their various play-games than to try and compete with them or get the kids to your theatre when they are supposed to be at the playground.

Try working with, rather than against, your playgrounds. They can be converted into dollars and cents just as your local schools during the winter. In fact, the same tie-ups that apply to the schools are most always feasible for the playgrounds, with the added incentive that you may be able to sell them an idea that on raining days the youngsters meet at your theatre at a special playground admission price. Think this over.

JAMES McKOY MADE FINE SALES MANUAL FOR ORCHESTRA ACT

Prompted by the thought that managers are often up against it when collecting enough good material at short notice for the selling of some band act, we will touch briefly on what James H. McKoy, city manager for Publix in Miami, Fla., did when Ray Teal and his Floridians hit his town.

Like many other orchestra attractions Teal had no real, organized selling campaign and McKoy took it upon himself to shape one into manual form. A cursory inspection of the several neatly put together pages is convincing evidence that not many selling angles were overlooked. Newspaper, screen, lobby, etc., are all covered in the various phases of advertising and exploitation. Mats of all description are illustrated; newspaper readers set forth; booth lighting cues intelligently set down; suggestions made for advertising copy, as well as full information for the stage manager.

Beyond a doubt the next manager who played Teal and his band had a much less difficult time shaping a selling campaign, owing to the practical suggestions outlined by McKoy. He had something in tangible form to work with and undoubtedly produced results. Maybe this tip of McKoy's will inspire other managers to act when similarly situated, for after all what it really amounts to is that which most any good showman is capable of doing—just taking what you have to sell and getting organized—instead of proceeding in helter-skelter fashion.

Collins Promoted

Corwin Collins, formerly assistant manager of Keith's 105th Street Theatre, Cleveland, Ohio, has succeeded Art Stern as manager of the RKO Palace. Howard Higley succeeds Collins.

JANECKY PROMOTED!

Harold F. Janecky, formerly in charge of the Warner Theatre, Milwaukee, Wis., and lately manager of the Skouras Theatre, Lynbrook, L. I., N. Y. has ben appointed district supervisor for Skouras houses with headquarters at the Jackson Theatre, Jackson Heights, L. I.

Zack Freedman, who succeeds Janecky at the Lynbrook, arranged a testimonial dinner for the latter at the Hempstead Elks Lodge, at which some twenty house managers were present.

ATMOSPHERIC LOBBY FOR 'PLANE PICTURE DREW FOR D. V. TERRY

A few words from D. V. Terry, manager of the Woodward and Terry Theatres, Woodward, Okla., informs us that an atmospheric lobby display made for "Hell Divers" was the source of much word-of-mouth publicity for that picture.

The display was made by Bill Patterson, associate of Terry's and an ex-vaudeville performer. The large, model 'plane shown in the accompanying photo extended out toward street from marquee and was equipped with an electric motor to turn the propeller. Lights and a loud speaker were also part of the display.

HELL DIVERS
HELL DIVERS

The photo hardly does justice to the display but the snap was small and the above result was the best we could obtain under conditions. We'll be on the lookout for further news from Terry's section of the country.

FILM SEIZURE MADE GOOD PUBLICITY FOR SMALLEY BOX OFFICE

Taking advantage of the wide publicity given seizure of a print of "Mouthpiece" a few weeks ago at the Strand Theatre, Syracuse, N. Y., George Miller, manager of Smalley's Theatre, Hamilton, N. Y., cashed in on that picture through ads inserted in newspapers in nearby cities. The ads read, "See it in Madison County while court makes decision for Syracuse."

A number of the Smalley theatres are located in towns but a few miles away from Syracuse and we can well imagine the interest stirred up by arrest of the Strand's manager, Perry Spencer, for alleged defamation of a character. It was a foregone conclusion that Bill Smalley would be on the job.

JACK WRIGHT ALSO WAGED A CAMPAIGN ON BROWN PICTURE

Among the many contributions from Club members on "Fireman Save My Child" we note that Jack Wright, manager of the Liberty Theatre, La Grande, Ore., did his share of work on that picture.

For several days in advance all his newspaper advertising shared space for announcements on the Joe E. Brown picture and the accompaning illustration will show how four young fellows used an old hose cart as a bally. Dressed in firemen's togs they hauled the cart through the principal sections of town. Another snap we have at hand shows a ladder built in front of the big electric sign atop the marquee, with large cutout of Brown hanging on by one hand.

No further information other than newspaper tear sheets and the snaps were received at headquarters, so we'll have to draw our own conclusions that the campaign panned out in the good old way. Keep socking the ball, Jack, and let's know what else is doing in showbusiness out at La Grande.

MILWAIN ARRANGED FREE DISTRIBUTION FOR HIS PROGRAMS

W. G. Milwain, manager of the Savoy Theatre, Princeton, Ky., recently arranged with two local concerns for distribution of weekly programs. One, a milk company with several hundred customers, places a program under each bottle of milk delivered to customers. The other, a dry cleaning outfit, sees that a program is placed in the pockets of each freshly cleaned or pressed article of clothing. Theatre credits take care of all cost.

Milwain is one of the boys under the wing of zone manager Lee Goldberg, Warner theatre executive in Louisville, Ky. All his men are forever hustling with some sort of a gag to keep the names of their theatres and current offerings before the public.

NO DUES OR FEES!

Our mail bag recently prompts us to again broadcast the fact that there are no initiation fees, dues or charges of any kind in conjunction with your membership in the Round Table Club.

You are likewise under no obligation of any kind other than to keep us posted on your activities and to let us be of whatever help we can to you and your theatre.

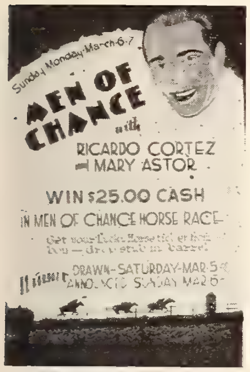
JOHN PIVAL SOUNDS OPTIMISTIC NOTE ON TRADE AT HIS HOUSE

One of our enthusiastic Club members out in Detroit, Mich., John Pival, who manages the Senate Theatre for Ben Cohen, would have us believe that he and his associates have knocked Old Man Depression down for the count, which is very pleasing news, indeed.



"Panicked 'em, dragged 'em in by their ears, ate it up," are just a few of the phrases Johnnie used to describe some recent activities at his house and the enthusiastic note of his letter forces us to take this Round Tabler at his word.

For instance, there was the "Martin Brothers Radio Show," all financed by the proprietor of a local radio store. He furnished the award of a new radio, a display in his window two weeks prior to show and a great deal of the advertising. Pival pitched in to help him with the entertainment and the results of their combined efforts produced a "complete radio show on the stage." Special tickets to be dropped in a barrel in the lobby were printed up for the occasion.

Then, there was the "Men of Chance" stunt, in which all patrons had to do in order to participate was to get a "horse ticket" from the boy attendant and drop same in the lobby barrel. The winning horse was named on a Saturday night before opening day of the feature. Six prominent merchants and political leaders were on hand for the big event.

A Swell Ballyhoo!

As for a bit of ballyhoo we'd like to call attention to a gag that was responsible for getting Ben Cohen out of bed at 3 A. M. a short time ago. At that time Johnnie became inspired with the idea of getting out a four-page extra on "Graft" after the regular run of the West Side paper, and he 'phoned Ben to get an okay. Well, he got it and the result was distribution of 20,000 copies, heads screaming in red that "Graft Had Been Exposed."

Maybe some of our members will recall the description we gave a short time ago of a little newspaper being published by the Senate. At that time it was a two-page affair; now we note that it's grown to four pages. At least 50 per cent of it is devoted a bona fide neighborhood news and the balance plugs the theatre and attractions. Johnny also writes a scandal column called "Seeing Things," in the popular tabloid column style of the day. Copies of the paper are delivered by a boy who steps up on porches and blows a two-tone whistle, which brings out the youngsters, or what have you, on the loop. "And do they eat it up?" to quote Round Tabler John. He'll be glad to send a copy to any member who is interested, we feel sure.

Pival tells us that a much larger house out in his city pulled a Radio Show gag a couple of weeks after it was run at the Senate and he deplores the fact that some showmen in small theatres labor under the impression that their houses are too small to pull sizeable affairs. "Just whittle 'em down," advises John, "and do the business."

We're reproducing a snapshot of a board made up on "Men of Chance" by Eddie Heals, house artist, but it's pretty small and will not do justice to his work. The copy tied in with the horse race gag that Pival pulled. Maybe Eddie will send along some good photos or sketches, and if he does we'll promise to do our best with them. In the meantime, thanks to Pival for his contributions. We know he'll keep up the good work.

"Twenty-five different attractions all for the price of one," we can almost hear a member of Eddie Corcoran's staff bark in front of the box office at the Steel Pier, that famous amusement enterprise on the boardwalk at Atlantic City, N. J. You will recall that Corcoran used to put over exploitation campaigns for Keith's in Philadelphia; now he's acting as publicity director for the Steel Pier, where he not only sells pictures but a lot of other attractions, all for one admission. The above photo shows the front.

Projectionist Stunt

The manager of the Westwood Theatre (we are unable to name him at this writing), Westwood, Calif., with the aid of his projectionist, recently hit upon a novel stunt to exploit the Joe E. Brown picture, "Fireman Save My Child." He had the operator rehearse the trailer until he knew every spot where Brown opened his mouth to shout his famous H-elllllp! When the trailer was thrown on the screen the volume was reduced to a whisper and then amplified it to several times normal. Other houses have since used this stunt and produced startling effects.

WATCH YOUR STEP!

Managers who contemplate any form of contest, prize competitions or schemes of any kind in connection with which the mails are to be used are advised to ascertain whether such matter is admissible to the mails in view of the fact that the postal laws prohibit the mailing of matter relating to schemes or enterprises for the award of prizes or distribution of money or property by lot or chance, drawings, guessing contests, lucky number contests, etc., and should submit to their local postmaster details and full particulars of such schemes in order to avoid violation of the lottery laws.

ARNOLD GATES BUSY PUTTING OVER SHOWS AT CLEVELAND HOUSE

Since it is quite logical for news of Easter Egg Hunts to reach this office after the stunt has been pulled our members will have to overlook the late date in recording that Arnold Gates, manager of Loew's Granda Theatre, Cleveland, had his neighborhood all pepped up with the Hunt he staged during the season.

Fifty worthwhile awards for the youngsters, including bunnies, skates, puppies, kodaks, candy, baseballs, bats, games, hats, and numerous other articles were promoted from merchants and listed as a special herald issued for the occasion. Credit lines were given the merchants underneath name of article. Boys and girls had separate hunts and the game was supervised by firemen and policemen. Awards were made from the stage of the theatre.

Other evidence of Gates' activities is shown on a card and herald. Copy on the card tied-up with a local photographer and stated that after four marks had been punched by theatre doorman the holder would be entitled to one large portrait without charge. The herald tied up with Century Air Lines on "Hell Divers" and were distributed over neighborhood from air by 'plane. The stunt included the usual identifying mark good for guest tickets, when herald was returned to box office.

Gates tells us the latter stunt produced tremendous response despite adverse weather conditions. We also gather that the 'plane company stood a good portion of the expense on account of its ad on part of the herald. Thanks, Arnold, for keeping in touch with headquarters. Let's hear some more at the first opportunity, because your activities always make interesting reading for the rest of your brother members. We will be looking for your next trade booster.

HERE ARE MORE NEW CLUB MEMBERS!

LEON PICKLE'S name is not a new one to readers of Round Table Club pages for we've often published accounts of what this manager has done to sell shows at the Kentucky Theatre, Henderson, Ky. He's one of Zone Manager Lee Goldberg's boys and Lee has been kind enough at various times to keep us posted on what has been going on at several houses under his supervision. Leon has been a reader of this department for the past three years and has now resolved to do his best to return some of the favors he has received from other Round Tablers. We hope he means just that. Shoot your ideas along, Leo, and we'll do our part.

———Wear Your Club Pin! ! !———

JACK E. SARPHIE hails from down south in Brookhaven, Miss., where he skippers a theatre that bears his own name; all of which leads us to believe that this new member will have to be classed as an owner-manager. It's a pleasure to add his name to the ever-lengthening Club roster and it will not be our fault if Jack doesn't do his bit in the way of contributing his share of show-selling gags for this department. We will hope to hear from him again at the first opportunity.

———Wear Your Club Pin! ! !———

C. A. BOSHART is located out in Topeka, Kas., where he manages the Fox-Grand Theatre and he is another showman who is ready to be introduced to the many readers of this department. Glad to have you with us, Boshart, and we're sure the rest of the gang feel likewise about your application. Now that you're an elected Round Tabler, tell us something about your methods of selling shows. Pass along any good gag that will help a brother manager sell some extra tickets. We're sure your interest will be appreciated.

———Wear Your Club Pin! ! !———

W. B. HOLDEN is the skipper of that big B & K deluxer, the Uptown Theatre, at 4814 Broadway, Chicago, Ill., and it certainly will be interesting to hear what kind of tonic is being fed to the box office of this house. It takes some showmanship to run a 5,000-seat theatre and that means that Holden is forever on the job of formulating ideas which will work out in his favor. It is indeed a pleasure to record that he has become a member of this organization and we hope he will be able to find the necessary time to send along some of his ideas. We're sure every Round Tabler will want to know what methods he's using.

———Wear Your Club Pin! ! !———

CHARLES B. CRAIG is located over in the famous old town of Gloucester, Mass., and it becomes our duty to announce that another Publix man has sent us an application for Club membership. That's the proper spirit, Charles, and we're listing your name under the many others that work on the same circuit. Practically everyone of these showmen have been conscientious contributors to this department and we hope you'll do the same. Let us hear from you as often as possible.

———Wear Your Club Pin! ! !———

JOHN A. RYAN is the owner-director of the RCA Theatre, Scranton, Pa., and we're mighty glad to record that his application for membership in the Round Table Club has been received. Mr. Ryan and his son, John A. Jr., are on their toes down in this live Pennsylvanian city and we're sure that their suggestions will be both worthwhile and welcome to the other members of this organization. We must congratulate him on picking an original name for his theatre.

THEODORE L. SMALLEY started off in life to become an artist and newspaperman but changed his course and eventually became a member of the crew of the good old ship Publix. He's been with this outfit for the past three years and we now find him at the helm of the well known Washington Street Olympia Theatre, Boston, Mass., a house formerly managed by the deservedly famous George Laby, and often represented in this department. We're mighty glad to have the Olympia again on our list and if Smalley treats this department just half as well as Laby did, we'll be satisfied. So get busy, Ted, and give us a chance to catch up on back numbers of what's been going on at your theatre.

———Wear Your Club Pin! ! !———

ED. C. CURDTS is the owner-manager of the Bijou Theatre, Greenville, S. C., and what's more, he's been that way for the past twenty-five years. He recently celebrated his Silver Anniversary and we honestly believe that here is a record for some of the other Club members to shoot at. We like the spirit with which his application is sent. He "hopes to put as much into the Club as he's sure he'll take out," and believe us, fellow Round Tablers, that's the way to tackle the slogan of "All for one and one for all." Good luck, fellow Round Tabler Curdts, and let headquarters hear from you whenever possible.

———Wear Your Club Pin! ! !———

NCHOLAS SCIARTILLI manages the Magnet Theatre down in Minnoka, Pa., and we're taking this opportunity to acknowledge his request to include his name among the go-getting showmen members of this organization. Okay, Nick, you're in the army now—right now—and we hope you'll make an A Number One soldier in this outfit. Send along some good show-selling gags for your brother Round Tablers and we'll make you a top sergeant. Let's hear from you regularly.

Rice is one of the many Publix men listed on the Club roster and we have every reason to believe that he'll do his level best to keep up the excellent pace set by his brother managers in all parts of this country in the matter of making regular contributions to this department. Tell us what's going on at the Central, Rice, and we'll pass along the information to the other fellows.

HARVEY HANREDDY is an RKO man at South Bend, Ind., where he has charge of the Granada Theatre. He's another applicant to the ranks of this go-getting group of showmen and we're here to state that we're mighty glad to add his name to the ever-growing list. JOHN A. RYAN, JR., is the son and namesake of the owner of the RCA Theatre in Scranton and he's running true to that old saying of "like father, like son." He also is growing up in show business and he's co-manager of the house at this writing. With both John, Sr. and John Jr., to keep us informed on doings at the RCA, the Club should not lack for news from that Scranton neighborhood. Take a little time off at the first opportunity, John, and tell us about that last good gag you and dad used to fill the house.

———Wear Your Club Pin! ! !———

CARROLL A. BUCKLEY is the first assistant manager of the Fields Corner Theatre, a Publix house in Dorchester, Mass., and his job is helping Manager Joseph Lourie in the game of show business. Buckley is 21 years of age and has been with the Fields Corner since it opened eight years ago. He has come up from the ranks to his present position and his boss tells us that he is an able executive. We're glad to make room around the Table for this new member and hope to hear regularly from both him and Lourie.

DAN GILHULA sends his appreciation for membership in this club from Holyoke, Mass., where he manages the Strand Theatre, a Publix first-run house with straight picture policy. Welcome to the gang, Dan, and let's hope that you, too, will become an enthusiastic contributor to this department. Seems to us you might be able to get us up a smart yarn about building up attendance of students, since your town boasts of a couple of well known temples of knowledge. What say, Dan? Do your bit.

———Wear Your Club Pin! ! !———

DAVID BOOKER is the manager of the Broadmoor Theatre over in Bloomfield, N. It's just a question of time, Dave, when every manager will have received a certificate of membership in the Round Table Club, and we're mighty glad to see that you've taken the necessary time to clip one of the application blanks. Now that you're one of the gang we hope you'll do your best to contribute some suggestions on show-selling. Send along some recent gags you've used and we'll see that the gang is tipped off.

CHICAGO

If the local censor board, the members of which are now facing amputation from their jobs as part of the city's economy program, feel that Mayor Cermak is over-diligent in backing the move to abolish the board, they have only themselves to blame. The board, ever alert in scrutinizing pictures from the moral standpoint and quick with the shears and pink tickets, pulled a serious faux pas when it completely missed the scene in Doug Fairbanks' "Around the World" film where Chicago is identified by exploding bombs as the magic carpet sails over the city. His Honor himself saw the picture, burned up plenty over what he termed a slur on the fair name of the city, and ordered the scene cut pronto. How the board missed this scene has been a puzzle to the Mayor ever since and the incident is undoubtedly responsible for no little misgivings in the Mayor's mind as to the value of this group of city hirelings. Consequently Chicago's chief executive is figuring that if that type of service can be eliminated at a saving to the administration of some $35,000 per year—well it will be okay with him.

Columbia Pictures executives stopped off at the local exchange to greet Bill Brumberg between trains en route to the West Coast for the company's western convention. Those in the party were Charles Rosenzweig, Abe Montague, Rube Jackter, Jerry Safron, Sam Moscow, Joe McConville, George Brown, Lou Weinberg, Hal Hode, Mort Wormser and Henri Brunet.

The Castle Theatre operated by Dick Beck had a short lift as the city's exclusive newsreel theatre and is now back to feature pictures.

Clyde Eckhardt, back from the Fox sales convention, is the picture of enthusiasm and optimism. He will tell you in no uncertain terms that the Fox product announcement is the finest thing he has ever seen.

Dave Dubin has established headquarters at 908 S. Wabash avenue, where he has taken over large space. He says he will shortly have an important announcement to make.

Signs of something or another: the new radio in Aaron Saperstein's office.

Lou Abramson says all this talk about theatres closing looks kind of funny to him because there are almost as many opening as closing. He cites the following houses which have all been opened within the past three or four weeks: the Hawthorne, Virginia, Empress, Avenue, Janet and Blaine.

M. Van Praag, sales manager of National Screen Service, was a visitor at the Chicago branch last week.

STAGE ATTRACTIONS
FOR PICTURE THEATRES

NOVELTY

George Sidney
Newark State

Mr. Sidney, the well-known and popular comedian of the screen, packed them in at this house. No big stage production was built for this sterling character; he didn't need it. All that was done was the throwing together of a number of scenes from newsreels, with a short scene of himself entering a stage door. This was used as his introduction and was quite laughable. When he did appear he was given a rousing reception. In that inimitable way of his, which makes you feel as if he were your friend, he told the audience about Hollywood, not the usual bunk about the film capitol but a humorous slant that got many laughs. He followed this with a skit in which he was supposed to make a picture then and there, with the identical action flashed on the screen immediately after. A surprise finish was added to the film that was most entertaining. He next offered a novelty song and dance and closed with a story made up of picture titles.—E. D.

Guy Lombardo and His Royal Canadians
Detroit Michigan

This is one popular orchestra that seems to specialize in music. To report that the absent antics are not missed is a tribute to Lombardo's ability as a popular musician. "This Is the Missus" is the opening bid here. Lombardo adds his violin to the other nine pieces for the second number, "Paradise," and his brother, Carmen, sings a chorus. "Crazy People," breezy comedy bit, is embellished by a vocal trio and highlighted strains of a steel guitar. A medley including "Oh, What a Thrill" and "Lawd, You Made the Night Too Long" is given visual interpretation by a waltzing ballet. Another of Lombardo's brothers—it seems a family affair—gives a tender rendition of "My Mom." This is followed by "When the Organ Plays at Twilight." Then comes the orchestra's radio signature number with a Robert Burns announcement. The closing number is a vocal offering by Carmen Lombardo of his own composition, "Snuggled on Your Shoulder." This is polished entertainment.

Bob Carvey and 2
New York Hippodrome

Bob gives a 15-minute performance of talks, song and dance. There are three in the act—a girl, Marion Kingston and a stooge called Harry Pollard who does a part of the comedy which is not so good, but gets by. The act is uneven, but has the basis of good entertainment if it were polished up.

Viola Rudell and Edward Dunigan
Baltimore Keith's

A comedy song and hokum act, introduced by Dunigan talking into a false Microphone and interrupted by Miss Rudell.

Bookers Realigned For Close Contact With RKO Houses

Each RKO theatre is to have a more direct contact with its own vaudeville booker as a result of a realignment of bookers and the theatres they handle, following a four-week study of the booking office of the organization. The changes, effected last Saturday, follow:

Arthur Willi now books the Palace, Hippodrome, Coliseum, Fordham, Madison, Albee, and Proctor's Newark.

W. Howard now books Buffalo, Toronto, Albany, Troy, Schenectady, Boston, Providence, Trenton, Yonkers and Paterson.

Phil Bloom now books Syracuse, Rochester, the 105th Street and Palace, Cleveland; Chicago, South Bend, Minneapolis, St. Paul, Seattle, Tacoma, Portland, San Francisco, Oakland, Los Angeles, Denver, Omaha, Kansas City, Little Rock, New Orleans and Atlanta.

Lowell, Mass., Portland and Auburn, Maine, which were formerly booked by Jack Dempsey, have been put on the books of the Boston office, in charge of C. S. Breed.

There have been no changes in the heads of the vaudeville department, George Godfrey remaining in charge under the direction of Martin Beck.

Publix Uses Stage Play as Means of Increasing Gross

Publix plans the introduction of a three-act play between the first and second shows at four neighborhood de luxe houses in Detroit. A stock company, organized by Ed Turner in New York, gives its first performance this week.

The theatres involved are the Redford, Annex, Alhambra and Ramona. A new play will be in rehearsal during the week and will be presented in the same houses during the following week.

RKO, NBC Departments Merge

Frances Rockefeller King, formerly in charge of RKO booking of private and club entertainment, has been placed in charge of the combined departments of RKO and National Broadcasting Company. Harold B. Franklin, chief of RKO theatres, described the move as a "logical step," in indicating the reason for the consolidation.

Capitol Shifts Change Day

The Capitol theatre in New York has moved its weekly change day from Friday to Thursday.

SINGERS

Jeanne Aubert
New York Palace

This French comedienne of Ed Wynn's "The Laugh Parade," possesses rare charm and goes through a routine of musical comedy songs which pleases. Miss Aubert should have a pianist to accompany her instead of just the pit orchestra. A sophisticated audience will like this act.—H. P.

Vaughn DeLeath
Newark State

Miss DeLeath, the radio star with a million per cent personality in her voice, is an entertainer through and through. In her act she uses two piano accompanists and sings her songs through a microphone.

Her first number is "I Love a Parade," interspersing a medley of popular tunes. She follows this with the singing of "Paradise," "Lawd You Made the Night too Long," and an encore of "Minnie the Moocher." Audience reaction to Miss DeLeath's act is distinctly favorable.—E. D.

Little Jack Little
New York Palace

Little Jack Little, radio star, opens with an original song, then does "My Mom," after which he gives a piano solo of Kate Smith's famous theme song, "When the Moon Comes Over the Mountain." Jack has a pleasing personality, sings well and his efforts are duly rewarded.—H. P.

Janet Reade
New York Roxy

This young lady is brimful of personality and ability. She opens with a number called "The Scat Song," a rhythm number, rendered in true Harlem fashion. Closing with "I'm One of God's Children," this popular singer does very well.—H. P.

Emma Woodland and Roy Smoot
Dallas Palace

This couple of socalled "Golden Throated Viennese Lovers," give voice to love songs, but the exotic ensemble of twelve in their acrobatic number and their beautifully performed dance and postures, using enormous ostrich feather fans, were the real hit of these appearances. The background for their song numbers, using movable cut-out settings with the singers appearing in the heart-shaped frames, was very pretty and the grouping of the chorus was exceptionally colorful.

McCann Sisters
New York Capitol

The McCann sisters, a harmony trio, offer a group of rhythm songs with fair success. A bit of novelty would help this act since there is nothing outstanding.—H. P.

ATTENTION EXHIBITORS BOOKING TALENT! This department aims to serve you in booking acts. We have on file the information on how to get in touch with any act reviewed. Write to Stage Attractions Department, Motion Picture Herald, 1790 Broadway, New York City.

REVIEWS OF ACTS FOR PICTURE THEATRES

NOVELTY

Russian Revels (12)

Cincinnati Albee

Act opens with seven men doing a song in front of a special drop of Russian design. These men, two girls and a conductor then are seen in full stage through a scrim composing a string orchestra, all dressed in native costume, with an elaborate back drop of varied Russian emblems and patterns. Several selections are played with the customary snappy tempo characteristic of the country of origin. A girl toe dancer then does some unusually clever steps to accompaniment of the musicians, followed by a blonde girl with an acrobatic dance in bare feet. The two girls are featured in a violin number, after which one of the men executes a rapid Russian dance. "A gold statue with a soul" is introduced, appearing in alcove in center of back drop. This shows a girl whose entire face and figure are gold from tip to toe. Posing as a statue, she gradually "comes to life" to do a classical dance. Here is an act which fairly breathes class.

Lew Pollack (6)

New York Palace

Billed as the writer of 100 hits, Lew Pollack, famous song writer, introduces five proteges, four dancers, a baritone who sings the chorus of each of Lew's best-known song hits, namely "Diane" from "7th Heaven," "Charmain" from "What Price Glory" and "Angel Mia" from "Street Angel." This act drew a round of applause.—H. P.

Walter Walters

New York Triboro

Walters, an excellent ventriloquist, uses a woman assistant, and three dummies. He is dressed in western attire and works in one before a western scenic drop. Walters sings, talks, whistles, etc. The act is good clean fun and sure-fire entertainment.—E. D.

Britt Wood

New York Palace

Britt Wood is a harmonica player who ranks with the best. His repertoire includes some martial airs, folk songs and features "My Hero," from "The Chocolate Soldier." This act was well received. For an encore Wood effectively imitated a bagpipe.—H. P.

Cardini

New York Capitol

Here is a magician with all the trimmings; suave, sure, a winning personality and a bag of tricks that go over with a bang. He opens with some card tricks, goes into a sleight-of-hand bit, and then wows the audience with a cigaret trick which is a knockout. A sure-fire act that would fill any bill to advantage.—H. P.

Al Allan and Lilian Croel

Loew's Yonkers

A girl, a boy and a trick piano. Miss Croel has a pleasing personality and sings well, with Allan providing the comedy by his clownish antics on the ivories. While Miss Croel is "Helen Morganing," Allan opens his bag of tricks at the "prop" piano, at the same time keeping up a funny bit of chatter with his partner. This act is good clean fun and was well received by the audience.—H. P.

Florence Richardson and Her N. B. C. Boys (14)

Brooklyn Metropolitan

Outstanding in this novelty band act is the beauteous Miss Richardson, who capably leads her group through a series of popular and semi-popular songs. Miss Richardson puts on the flash for the act in her metallic cloth suit and barret, and her ever-flashing smile, while the boys are dressed in conventional tuxedos. While most of the act consists of playing, entertaining novelty is interspersed, in the form of a rhythm dance by one of the band-men, an outstanding eccentric dance routine by a young woman, and novelty band numbers. Matt Mason, one of the pianists, is also vocalist and his good voice earns him good applause. Preceding the finale, patriotic songs are featured in the spectacle, "Parade of the Holidays." Seventeen minutes to the dot was ticked off as the curtain lowered on the act's playing of "Sweet Lady."—E. D.

Jack Powell

New York Roxy

Jack Powell, blackface comedy drummer from "The Laugh Parade," gives a very clever performance with the drumsticks. Utilizing the floor, his chair, the walls and everything within reach, he drums a routine of rhythm that is both novel and entertaining.—H. P.

Happy-Go-Lucky Gang

Warfield San Francisco

The Happy-Go-Lucky Gang from radio broadcasting station KFRC offer a novelty revue in which music and fun is well mixed. Al Pearce heads the outfit and every program differs from the preceding one.

PLAYLETS

Belett and Lamb (5)

New York Palace

Belett and Lamb, assisted by a company of three, offer a comedy sketch which is full of laughs. Looking for "Joe's Place," one of the principals is suspected of being a prohibition agent and is led to believe that the "joint" is an insane asylum. This is the setting for hearty laughter during which there is some able dancing on the part of one of the girls.—H. P.

Nan Halpern

Golden Gate San Francisco

After an absence of several years Nan Halpern is back with a comedy sketch, "Women, Here, There and Everywhere." She satirizes the foibles of the fair sex in an unusual portrayal of various types, making the characterizations worthy and artistic. For smiling purposes, she proves an authority on women.

Fred Ardath & Co. (3)

Brooklyn Metropolitan

A comedy act built around a "drunk's" story to his wife. Ardath, as the "drunk," is ably assisted by Jack Gregor, as the friend who helps him make up the story, and Klar Magnus, a striking blonde, as the wife. This act, slightly elaborated upon, was made into a motion picture short some time ago by these same people, and as a short proved much more entertaining than the same act on the stage.—Running time, 15 minutes.—E. D.

DANCERS

Mary Brian

New York Paramount

The applause that greeted the beauteous Miss Brian was proof enough that she has a host of followers. For her share in this "All In Fun" show, Miss Brian's outstanding bit is her rhythm dance, done with the David Bines boys.

She was dressed in a powder blue dress suit, making a pleasing contrast to the boy's conventional black. Miss Brian is a surprisingly agile and graceful dancer and her work drew plenty applause.

She also does some bits with the other members of the cast.—E. D.

Harrison and Fisher

Detroit Fisher

This couple offers an adagio and ballet performance. They make two appearances during the stage show here, the first a brief formal ballet that adds only time to the bill. The second appearance is in an impressive adagio number, costumed but little more elaborately than was the ancient act of Adam and Eve. The fact that the man and the girl both have beautiful physiques detracts nothing from the number. A class act.

George Raft

New York Paramount
